Hints for the Home

by Nancy Hart

From now on until the earliest buds push up their shoots through the cold spring earth, we must depend on window gardens and the florist for our flowers and greenery. The woman with a knack for making things grow can, at small expense of money and pleasant expense of energy and time, have a most attractive window garden. Really the knack for making things grow probably consists more in being careful and watchful than in any real gift of luck.

Off in the country, far away from a florist, and where she would never have seen a flower after winter set in if she had not grown it, a farmer's wife has the most attractive window garden.

She has a sunny window which she never opens in a corner of the living-room. The room is well aired, light and large. Across this window she has several shelves, enameled green. There are no curtains at the window, but there is a heavy shade, which is drawn to help keep out the cold night air. On the bottom shelf this woman plants a few more seeds, and she has blooming nasturtiums and morning glories all winter long. They trail over the edges of the box and climb up strings at the sides of the window and altogether make a most alluring display. On the higher shelves this housewife keeps potted plants of various sorts, and moves them about to better parts of the room, bringing them back for a couple of days in the sun every once in a while.

A more sophisticated window but not a more charming one, is made by placing a box of English ivy along the window and training a curtain for the lower half of the window. This is an admirable treatment for a window that reaches to the floor, and it is also good if you wish to screen your window from an uninteresting outlook. A city apartment window that looks out on a blank wall not many feet away is charming with a yellow scrim curtain shirred across the upper half, a red lacquered box across the middle of the window, between top and bottom sash, and a screen of trailing ivy over the lower pane. Remember that all plants need light and air, and that most of them are better for much sunlight. Even if they do not get the direct rays of the sun very often, they need bright light. And scientific experiments have proved that plants can be artificially stimulated to growth by electric light. So if you have little sunlight, you might try the interesting experiment of seeing if you can partly make up to them by turning electric light on them for a couple of hours every evening.

If you like ferns on the dining table, let them visit your sunny windows a part of every day. All ferns thrive the better for a little sun, even those that naturally prefer shade. Some successful growers of plants use a little liquid manure every couple of weeks. Don't use too much, and don't pour it directly against the plant, but rather on the earth around the plant. One thing that makes it sometimes difficult to grow flowers and plants in many of our modern apartments and houses is that the air is too dry. So always have open dishes of water on the radiators—they need not be eyesores, for you can use brass or pottery jars that are decorative. This water evaporates and helps restore moisture taken from the air by the heat. These water jars, indeed, ought to be in every heated room in winter, for they improve the air not only for plants but for human animals as well.

Mrs. Gordon (to husband who is listening in on Sunday evening's radio program): Tammas, Tammas, ye mustn't laugh like that on the Sabbath. Tammas: Laugh, wumman! The minister has just announced a collection and here I am safe at home!

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS

The old year has about reached the end of its trail, and 1930, like a candidate waiting to be initiated into a secret order, is about to be admitted. We stand in wonder and anticipation on the threshold of the New Year, and wonder what is behind the door which bears the name plate 1930. Let's all be truthful in 1930; lying is a fault in a boy, an art in a bachelor, a necessity to a married man and a duty to a diplomat. We know of only one family where the male is the boss, and he isn't four years old yet. That's the truth. Here's wishing you all a prosperous 1930.
