WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH FARMING?

WITH the agricultural season of 1930 beginning to get under way the eyes of the nation are focused upon agriculture and its problems and possibilities as they seldom have been before.

For the first time since the early days when we were primarily an agricultural nation, big business and financial interests are taking an interest in the farmer's problems from another point of view than the mere desire to sell mer-chandise to him. They are beginning to see the possibility that agriculture may develop into an actually profitable industry.

For fifty years the farmers of the United States have been crying poverty so persistently that the rest of the people had just about come to believe them. The farmer, in the THE NEW PLANET. eyes of the average business man in the city, was a poor dub struggling for a bare existence, facing foreclosure and the poorhouse every day of his life. That was the natural reaction from the loud outcries of the farmer lobbyists in Washington who, whether they intended to do so or not, conveyed the impression that unless something was ione by the Government all the farmers would have to go out of

That never was the case, as anybody who knows anything about farming knows. There are poor far-mers everywhere-poor in both senses of the word. There are disgruntled farmers everywhere, who talk poor when they are really a good deal better off than most of their neighbors. It has always been the farmer's privilege to grumble about the weather and the corn-borer and the boll-weevil and the other pests that make agriculture one of the most exciting occupations in the world. But the general run of farmers get along pretty well, considering, and now that a constructive program of Government aid has been adopted and is actually in practice. the cries of the farm lobbyists are hushed and the rest of the country

In addition to that, he has a basic capital of a great many millions of his own money invested in the shares of the cooperative marketing associations, and some of the biggest investors in the land have added more millions to that capital by buying the bonds and debentures of the national cooperatives. The greatest danger to the farm-er just now seems to be that other people will swing to the opposite view of him and think he is making view of him and think he is making hunter for the biological survey, money so easily that it might be a killed during the month of March, good line for them to go into.

From Hardman on to the mouth of Mc-Kinney creek is not so bad. The prospects are good for Heppner to receive the bulk of the wool from the Monument section this year as we get it, and this business would be sure to come this way if a little work could be done on the roads leading this way. By keeping everlastingly at it, this connection will again be established, and Heppner will be in a position to enjoy a return of the trade from the north end of Grant county.

STEPS are being perfected for the for the establishment of a freight truck line between Monument and Heppner, with prospects good for business. Just now, however, there is some difficulty in getting over a portion of the road because of its condition. It is the purpose of Mr. Merrill, who is putting on the freight truck to come into Heppner via the Heppner-Spray road, and there is work needed on both ends of this route. Some of this will be ione this season out of the recent appropriation of federal road funds, to which it is hoped a few more thousands may be added in the near
