THE ELECTORATE ON TRIAL.

WHEN a man runs for public office all his past mistakes and future intentions are drug into the limelight before the relentless public gaze. Spotless, indeed, must be his character if there can be found nothing in his record by which those who do not agree with him politically can attempt to belittle him in the eyes of the populace.

But with the dawn of election day morning, campaigners' guns are silenced. The battle is over. Though the battlefield may be strewn with the carnage and ruin of wrecked characters, blasted hopes and lost ambitions, the howitzers bark no more. The sum of their effectiveness is told only by the trueness of the marksman's aim and the quality of his ammunition, in the number of "hits" registered.

But before the spoils of battle can be shared, an accounting of the "hits" must be made. With the sounding of reveille soldiers must step into line for inspection, and a count is made of the missing.

Under our democratic form of government the soldiery is every citizen on 21 years of age or past. Already the deserters have been ascertained as those who failed to register. Reveille tomorrow morning will find that the ranks of the deserters has increased. There will also be those "A. W. O. L." who are not real deserters. Top sergeants, tomorrow, will find in their ranks only those who have been wounded and were not able to escape. For in this army of the electorate, there is no court martial for the deserters to face; nothing to fear, if their duty is not performed.

The test tomorrow will be the sacred duty of good citizenship. Who will be numbered among the deserters; who, the loyal?

PROHIBITION.

PRESIDENT HOOVER'S appeal to Congress for the immediate passage of legislation designed to strengthen his hand in the enforcement of the prohibition laws removes all possible doubt if any ever really existed, as to whether or not he is in earnest in his desire to make the "dry" laws effective.

To agitation for the repeal of prohibition, based upon the assertion that it cannot be enforced, the president's response is that it has not had a fair chance at enforcement under the system which Congress has imposed upon the executive. He asks that the prohibition unit be transferred from the treasury, where it obviously does not belong, to the department of justice, where it does belong; that measures be adopted to permit the speedy trial of prohibition violations in the federal courts; that more room be provided in federal prisons for those convicted under this law; that the border patrol be unified and made more effective and that an adequate statute be adopted for the control of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia, for which Congress is the local legislative body.

The president is entitled to adequate tools with which to do the work which Congress imposes upon him. If the people of the United States really want prohibition enforced, and have impressed that fact upon their representatives in the senate and house, Congress will strengthen the president's arm in these respects. If Congress fails to do so, the fact will be hailed by the advocates of repeal as proof that the people are tired of prohibition and do not want it enforced.

On that plea, that public sentiment has changed since the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted, the wets hope to win many victories at the polls this year. There are 36 senators to be elected in 1930, 435 members of the house of representatives and governors in more than half the states. In many, if not most of these contests the Wet vs. Dry issue will be the paramount one.

Whatever else national prohibition has accomplished, it has done precisely what such far-seeing statesmen as Presidents Taft and Wilson predicted it would do; it has cut across party lines and thrown the whole political system of the United States into confusion.

And unless this year's election settles the question, which is unlikely, there is an excellent chance that the sole major issue in the next presidential election will be that of prohibition. For nothing less than a clear-cut national referendum which will determine without equivocation just what the people of the United States today really desire as to control or suppression of the liquor traffic will satisfy the ardent advocates either of prohibition or of its repeal.

SUCCESS. "YOU cannot say that any man is successful, so long as he is alive," said the head of one of America's great industries not long ago. He meant that any man might make a blunder which would offset all that had gone before, no matter how successful he had been.

That was drawing it pretty fine, but how many men whom the world regards as "successful" feel that way about themselves? Find the men who feel that they have succeeded in doing all that they ever hoped or tried to do and you find the unhappiest men alive. They may have succeeded in their business enterprises, but they have not succeeded in living.

Success means different things to different people, and sometimes the man whom the world pities has succeeded in leading a happier life than has the one whom the world envies. A man who overtakes his ideals is not a success in any true sense of the word. Unless our standards grow steadily higher as we approach them we soon lose the zest of striving to attain them, and in that striving, not in the overtaking, lies happiness, and nowhere else.

It is a common misconception that the Declaration of Independence declares happiness to be one of the inalienable rights of mankind. The right which the colonists so boldly claimed was the right to pursue happiness. And the man or woman, who discovers early in life that the nearest approach to happiness is through a constant endeavor to do the job in hand, as well as it can be done comes nearer to success, not only in his or her immediate occupation but in the broader sense of living a successful life.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

VACCINES. Some time ago I attended a meeting of my medical society, the program being a sort of symposium—"What I Know About Vaccines"; all members were to participate in the discussion. After several interesting talks, one physician, noted for his terseness and pointed expression, arose and said, "I can tell you in very short time what I know about vaccines—not a damn thing!" Nevertheless the vaccines have come to stay. With their judicious and timely use, typhoid fever has all but become a thing of the past.

CONTEST ON AIR. The Pacific zone finals of the national oratorical contests on the constitution will be broadcast over KOAC Wednesday night, May 21, at 8 o'clock. This is the final contest between the winners from the colleges and universities of California, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas and Oregon. Denver Garner of Corvallis will represent this state.

J. H. Kinsman, former Heppner resident, was in the city on Saturday from his home at McMinnville. Mr. Kinsman still has property interests here, and was called to Heppner by the meeting of the creditors of A. M. Phelps before C. K. Cranston, referee in bankruptcy.
