You've Heard the Story

Of the fellow who thought that if he made a better mouse trap than anyone else, the world would make a beaten path to his door.

He went broke because the world forgot where his factory was and forgot how good his mouse trap was.

In these modern times with the changed methods of merchandising, advertising has become the necessary part of every commercial success.

It is not even possible nowadays to sell mouse traps or breakfast foods or ladies' coats without advertising.

From the simplest purchase of a package of gum to the luxurious automobile, good will has been built up by advertising.

The American buying public has come to look to the advertisements and to depend on them for its information and enlightenment.—Kelliher, Minn., "Forum."
