TELEVISION

Ten years ago the election of President Harding was one of the first attempts at radio broadcasting. Nobody could buy a radio receiving set in 1920, because there were none on the market. Only amateur electricians who made their own sets could get anything "on the air."

AODDO

Television is in the same stage today as broadcasting was in 1920. The Chicago Daily News broadcasts pictures of election charts on the night of November 4. Only those who could pick them out on the air who had built television receiving apparatus. There are no television receivers for sale. But there are thousands of eager amateurs experimenting in television in 1930, just as there were thousands experimenting in ordinary radio recep-tion in 1920. And in another ten years everybody may be able to stay at home and see pictures of events as they happen, by means of some sort of receiving device not yet invented.

loads of apples to New York City, to be given to the unemployed. Some 1,500 men began peddling ap ples at a nickle apiece, and in the first week took in about $12,000, or about $8 each. This did not do them any good nor relieve the unemployment situation. It was charity and beggary, only slightly disguised.

On the other hand, the agreement by a group of citizens to finance a general cleaning-up of parks, vacant lots and unsightly rubbishheaps, actually provided work for some thousands of unemployed. Any relief measure which does not require the recipient to work for what he gets is foolishly sentimental and dangerous. Once the average person finds he can get something for nothing, he loses his taste for giving the equivalent in work for every dollar he receives.

PROHIBITION

The election on November 4 was decidedly a "wet" victory in many parts of the United States, including the principal cities.

There is no question that millions of people who have heretofore always voted "dry" and who are in favor of prohibition in principle, have become disgusted with the prohibition law and its enforcement as it stands, and want a change.

I personally know many ladies who have been ardent "dry" workers who voted for "wet" candidates for Congress on no other ground. I have no solution to offer for the liquor problem. The control of traffic in "hard liquor" is a problem with which every civilized gove ment in the world is wrestling. govern

TREES

The Forest Service is out with its annual warning against depleting the forests by cutting too many young spruce, fir and pines for Christmas trees. Where they grow thickly it is good forestry practice to thin them out, but too many far mers will clear off an entire hillside top for the sake of sending their trees to a cash market.

This is not likely to be a good year in the Christmas-tree market, and farmers are warned not to be gin cutting until they have made all arrangements for the sale of Christmas trees to responsible buyers.

I like the custom which prevails in the South, of decorating living trees at Chrsitmas time. I have was prepared by me and that the expenditures and budget allowance for six months of the current year and seldom seen anything more beautithe expenditures for the three fiscal years next preceding the current year as shown above have been comful than Riverside Avenue in Jackpiled from the records in my charge and are true and correct copies thereof sonville with the trees blazing with
