BAA, BAA, BLACK SHEEP.

You all recall in the old nursery rhyme when the black sheep is asked if he has any wool he replies, "Yes, sir, three bags full." There is and has been plenty of wool but until very recent years there has been little demand for it for several reasons, but now it is beginning to come into its own.

In all the smart city shops one will find displayed for spring, wool ensembles, coats, sport suits and dresses. There is an infinite range of textures, weaves and colorings as varied almost as silks and nearly as delightful.

Wool is the oldest of the fabrics used by man for clothing and has been traditionally conservative. Until very recently woolen garments were bought primarily for service. One's wardrobe consisted only of woolen necessities whereas one had many silks.

However, times are changing and the element of style and novelty has entered into the manufacture of woolen fabrics. Manufacturers are now having to keep alert to the public demands and to find out in advance what the season's tastes are to be.

For years silk has been the leader in wearing apparel. There were several factors which lead to a decrease in the use of wool and an increase in the use of silk. One was the fact that many woolen mills in northern France were destroyed during the war and those that were left turned their looms over to the manufacture of khaki and blankets for the soldiers.

But now there is a decided impetus for the greater use of woolens. The sports tendency may have something to do with it. Johnny Farrel is recognized as America's best dressed golfer.

Wools in order to compete successfully with other fabrics have had to make a decided change in color and design. Some of the light weight fabrics are almost as light and supple as silks. Tweeds have outgrown their strict, mannish character. They have become more feminized, made subtle and varied.
