WEATHER CHANGES
CROP PROSPECTS

Weather conditions during recent weeks have improved the prospects for some crops, while others are less promising, says a crop and market report issued by the Oregon State college extension service. More winter wheat and corn, but less spring wheat, oats, barley and hay are expected.

Pastures and ranges are reported in very poor condition over the country generally. This is having an effect on dairy production and the condition of livestock. With a short hay crop in prospect and perhaps no more than an average supply of feed grains, dairy production may not be as large as would otherwise result from the three percent increase in milk cows in the country.

Figures gathered indicate that about eight per cent more pigs may be raised this year, the largest increase in prospect being in fall pigs although there was an increase in spring pigs. The western states, especially the coast states, show the greatest prospective increase in percentage, but in actual numbers the corn states are expected to increase the most.

"About an average output of late potatoes now seems in prospect," says the report. "The total crop is expected to be 15 per cent larger than last year, and somewhat above average, but the increase over the average is accounted for by early potatoes already marketed."

"World production of wheat promises to be materially below the large output last year and the world carryover outside of this country is not particularly burdensome. However, the new wheat crop in this country is expected to be as large as last year and well above the average, while stocks of old wheat are unusually large."

Market quotations received at the college showed that the top cash quotations for clover seed at Chicago have advanced three cents a pound since June 1, "which may be a reflection of the reduced acreage of clover meadows in the main seed producing states."

Sam Fester and Dr. Carl W. Emmons passed through Heppner Tuesday evening on their way to Salem, Dr. Emmons' home. These men are interested together in oil properties in Wyoming. Mr. Foster is known here for having made the test of the Wells Springs gas well.
