GREAT many people we know A GREAT many people we have remind us of the frog that Charles F. Kettering, chief research engineer of General Motors, told about the other day.

A deacon was on his way to church one Sunday morning, dressed in his best and with his shoes nicely polished, when he heard his called from a mudhole near oadside. Down in the hole the roadside.

"I have been in here three days," said the frog, "without anything to eat, and I wish you would help me

The deacon looked at the mud and looked at his shiny shoes and and looked at his shiny shoes and remembered that he had to pass the collection plate in church, so he replied: "I'm sorry old man, I can't help you now, but on my way back from church I'll give you a lift out of the hole"

Acts 17:1, 5-11; 1 Thessalonians 2:7-12 Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Paul and Silas were escorted to the boundary of Philippi by the very magistrates who sentenced them. That part of the country was also familiar ground during the recent world war. Thessalonica is the modern Salonica. The usual approach was made through the Jewish synagogue. Soon, jealousy arose because the success of the evangelists meant the giving up of many of the ancient national traditions and customs A group of roughnecks was stirred up to attack Paul and they sought him in the house of Jason. Fortunately the soul winners were elsewhere and poor Jason had to bear the brunt of the attack. Meanwhile high praise was paid to the work of the gospel in the charge that was made: "These that have turned the world upside down have come hith-

Since the messengers could no longer be heard in Thessalonica they were sent forward to Beroea, where the same method was pur-sued. These people showed just plain common sense when they took the words of Paul and sought out confirming references in their Scripture rolls, our Old Testament. Therein they found the prophecies concerning the Messiah and beheld their complete fulfillment in the life and works of Jesus Christ. We do not need to believe everything we are told, but many a great truth is lost because we refuse to give attention to the supporting evidence. The result was that many believed and among the number we find a group of Greek women of distinc-
