Do You Know Him?

"Certainly," you say. "He is Benjamin Franklin." Why do you know him? Because he was instrumental in starting our United States? Because he was a great statesman, a great writer, a great philosopher, a great printer, or a great inventor? No. You may know these things about him. But, you know him, principally because you have READ about him, and have seen his picture PRINTED many, many times, and because you have read many things he wrote. Many of his Poor Richard sayings have become so well known and commonly accepted as truths that they have become household by-words. The name and visage of Benjamin Franklin have been perpetuated through the years mainly by PRINTING—the art of which he was a recognized master in his day. "Printing is the art preservative of arts." It is a tremendous instrument of progress when properly applied—whether in newspaper message or private stationery, or commercial form.

We will assist you in giving it proper application.
