Historic Painting of Washington Restored to View

The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City has yielded to demands that it restore the painting, "Washington Crossing the Delaware," to its walls. Recently the trustees decided the painting was not a real work of art and ordered it to be stored in the basement. The painting was made by Emanuel Leutze, a German artist of the American school, in 1851.

INTERESTING FACTS ON FOREST ASSEMBLED BY LOCAL RANGER

By F. F. WEHMEYER, Heppner Forest Ranger.

Oregon has 14 national forests, divided into 65 ranger districts for administration.

Oregon has approximately 396 billion feet of merchantable timber or over one-fifth of the timber left in the United States.

The annual requirement of the people of the United States is 40 billion feet.

It is estimated that it will need 117,000 people to harvest, over a 30 year period, the present mature crop, and that the wealth circulated through this cut will represent 275 million dollars per year.

Timber estimates for Morrow county are 105,000 acres of privately owned timber containing one and one-half billion feet, and 121,995 acres of national forest containing nearly 600 million feet of commercial timber.

Grant county has 366,500 acres of private timber land containing four billion, 300 million feet, and 1,358,561 acres of national forest with 10 billion, 52 million feet.

Wheeler county has 190,000 acres of privately owned timber land with two billion, 470 million feet of timber, and 155,548 acres of national forest with one billion, 247 million feet.

Oregon has one state forest of 77,000 acres.

In favorable locations Douglas fir timber has brought $4.00 per thousand feet stumpage, and yellow pine has brought $8.00. White pine in New England has sold for over $20.00 stumpage. Thirty years ago 10 was considered a fair price for Douglas fir stumpage in Oregon.

In 1926 Oregon cut approximately four billion feet of timber with a manufactured value of over 100 million dollars. Forty-seven thousand people were employed, representing 65% of the state's industrial payroll.

Forest industries and standing timber pay over one-third of the taxes of this state.

Forest economists estimate that Oregon forests can be placed on a sustained yield basis and furnish employment for 80,000 people with a manufactured wealth of at least one and one-half times that of the year 1925.

Water power is potentially one of the greatest if not the greatest for any state in the Union. This water power depends upon the care of the water sheds. They will have to be kept in forest cover.

Recreation is another great resource depending for its life on the forests. It is estimated that three million people visited the national forests of Washington and Oregon the past season. I believe the tourist crop netted Oregon something like 20 million dollars last year.

Hunting and fishing depend largely on the care of the forest cover. No timber, means no water and no game.

The grazing resources of the state depend on the cooler forests for their summer pasturage.

Approximately seven million dollars are spent in Oregon and Washington for the improvement of the national forests and their administration.

Thirty-five percent of all national forest receipts are returned to the counties of the state for road and school purposes, each county receiving a share according to the area of national forest within the county boundaries.

Few people realize that our Oregon Douglas fir rivals the California sequoia or redwood for size. Douglas fir have been known to achieve a height of 350 feet and a diameter of 17 feet at stump height.

Two million acres of Oregon's timber producing land is now a waste with little or no present value, the balance of her forests need your protection. Fire is the great enemy of the forests and incidentally and ultimately your pocket-book. Be sure you get that last spark, whether it's in a camp fire, pipe or cigarette, when traveling in or near any forest land.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

MARY A. NOTSON, Reporter.

In Mexico, every week one hour is devoted to teaching of temperance in the schools. The hour is called the "anti-alcohol hour." The method was initiated by the ministry of industry, commerce and labor. Evidently, the economic aspects of the campaign are largely the determining factors. Health, morality and sobriety favor the productivity of any people.

Dr. W. A. Evans, prominent Chicago physician who conducts a health column in the Chicago Tribune, in answering an inquiry, said there is possibly some connection between eating sugar and the desire for alcohol, but "just what it is no one knows." He went on to say:

"Men drink alcoholic beverages because of desire and not because of thirst. The urge is emotional rather than physical. They are somewhat out of mental balance. People drink to fool themselves—that they may think they are kings when they are slaves, rich when they are poor, powerful when they are weak, jolly when they are downcast. If you and your husband have no desire for liquor it is because you have mental balance, are not given to wishful thinking, have emotional poise, do not let your feelings dehone your judgment, have had proper training, have character, and have had favorable social environment; and it is not because of the food you eat or the water you drink."

Notwithstanding all the clamor to "amash prohibition state by state," forty-four state legislatures which adjourned early in 1931 did not repeal a line of prohibition enforcement. These legislatures were composed of approximately 8000 members, elected in 1930, when the wet campaign was at its height in which the wets sought to repeal or modify prohibition. The wets introduced 200 wet bills in 32 states, but in 12 states they could not find a single member who would introduce such a bill. The only wet measures passed were in the form of vague memorials to congress.

These came from seven of the 44 states in which legislatures were in session, and were mere gestures. They accomplished nothing. In seventeen states bills introduced to repeal prohibition laws were defeated or killed in every instance. This does not seem to bear out the oft-reiterated claim of the wets that the majority of the people are favorable to repeal or modification (nullification). The legislatures

O.S.C. Inventory Shows High Value of Property

Of the total contributed by the people of Oregon to higher education in this state, approximately $7,582,367 is still represented as material assets in the form of property under control of the Oregon State college alone, a recent inventory shows.

Most of this is invested in the Corvallis plant where buildings, equipment, apparatus and livestock are inventoried at $6,431,573. Land at Corvallis, including close to 200 acres inside the city limits, is valued at $760,711.

Included in the inventory of the Corvallis plant is the Memorial Union building valued at $615,764 which cost the state nothing, being built from funds contributed by students, alumni, faculty and other friends. Inventory of land also includes 3040 acres of forest tracts given as gifts for use of the school of forestry.
