PEOPLE are hearing so much about the steps which are being taken in Washington and elsewhere to relieve the business depression by liberalizing the banking laws, by lending money to the railroads and other big financial interests, that it is natural for the man in the street to ask:

"What good does that do me?" Directly it doesn't do the average person any more immediate good than the spring rains do the farmer. The immediate effect of rain is to give everybody who goes out in it a good wetting. But the farmer who has gone through one or two seasons of drought knows that a season of rain at the right time is going to do him a lot of good in the course of a few weeks or months.

Under our financial system, the tendency of money and credit is to concentrate in the hands of a comparatively few trustees, the large banking and insurance companies, the big industries and the like. It flows out from them through the nation, in the form of loans for the purchase of goods, the financing of industry and business. It percolates through those channels into the hands of the mass in the form of salaries and wages and the price of raw materials, produced on the farm, in the forests and mines. As these final recipients spend it, it flows back through other but similar channels to its source. In normal times this process of outflow and inflow is continuous and the movement in both directions is equal in volume and speed. But in the times we have been going through some of the larger channels of inflow have been blocked, and there has not been enough left in the main reservoirs to maintain the normal outflow.

That is the way our financial system works. It may not be the ideal system; we are not arguing about that. It is the existing system, which, on the whole, works better than anything else that has been tried, and it is not likely to be changed very soon.

But our point is that every measure for easing credit and replenishing the supply of money must necessarily begin at the top. The main reservoirs must be filled first. And if that is done—and the reports we hear indicate that there is already a great improvement—funds and credit will begin to resume their old rate and volume of outflow into industry and business and so into the pockets of the public at large.

It is as foolish for the individual to get impatient over the delay in getting his share as it would be for the farmer to get impatient for his crop to ripen. Once the rain begins to fall, his crop is assured if he gives his fields their proper attention. The economic rain has begun to fall and those who will reap the best and earliest crops of prosperity will be the ones who give the closest attention to their business and their jobs right now instead of sitting around grumbling because they haven't yet got their share.

SPRING IS HERE AGAIN.
Autocaster Service.

EVERY year about this time we begin to feel that life is worth living after all. There is something about the return of Spring that fills the human spirit with new courage, that compels the human soul to a new realization of the wonders of this wonderful world we live in.

It is no wonder that humankind, from the earliest times, has celebrated the return of Spring as its greatest religious festival. The dead world has come to life. The sun has come back to us. That which was buried in the ground has arisen from the grave. The bare branches are clothing themselves with green. The birds have returned from their winter retreats and are building their nests among us. The beasts of the field and the forest are bringing forth their young. A new life cycle is beginning, after a cycle of darkness and death.

We can take it as symbolic, or believe literally in the resurrection of the body, but in every land all peoples of the earth have, from time immemorial, celebrated this season as the return of their gods from exile, as the promise of a new life hereafter when this one shall have been finished. That we shall come back from beyond the grave, clothed in new raiment, as the trees and the fields are clothed in new verdure after their winter's slumber, is the belief of nine-tenths of mankind. It is a belief that has sustained countless millions to endure the hardships and hardships of this life, and that shall continue for all time so to sustain those whose faith is strengthened and refreshed by each succeeding Spring.

CURLY-TOP FIGHT MAKES PROGRESS

Vegetable Varieties Found That Resist Blight Disease in Many Parts of Oregon.

Varieties of beans, squash and pumpkin found immune to curly-top disease have just been announced in a new circular of information issued by the Oregon Experiment station written by E. F. Dana, federal plant pathologist studying the problem in this state.

Curly-top is a blight disease carried by a small leaf hopper which is serious throughout the inland empire east of the Cascades, is more or less prevalent in southern Oregon, and one year was even found at a number of points in western Oregon. It was first identified on sugar beets in the Rocky mountain region and only recently was discovered to be the cause of so-called western yellow tomato blight and similar "blights" of many other vegetables.

In extensive field trials at Hermiston and elsewhere no tomato variety has been found showing any practical resistance to the disease. Tests will continue this year, using more than 800 strains and varieties of tomatoes gathered from all parts of the world.

"More encouraging results have been obtained with beans, squash and pumpkin," reports Mr. Dana. "Among field bean varieties the California Pink, California Red, Jenkins and Red Mexican, all colored sorts, were resistant. The Burtnor Blightless bean is the only white variety found resistant. It is a combination field bean usable also as a snap bean for home consumption. It was developed by a grower at Dufur, Oregon, after whom it was named. Common snap varieties were all susceptible to the lima beans were a class resistant."

The Umatilla is the only true squash so far found resistant, the popular Hubbard and Banana groups being highly susceptible. Among the pumpkins the Cushaw group and the Large Cheese group of varieties were most promising. Common Crook Neck and Patty Pan groups are very susceptible.

No "control" for the disease, other than use of resistant varieties, has yet been found. It also affects spinach, beets, Swiss chard, peppers and sometimes cucumbers and melons.

More "Heart Failures"

I feel sure my readers will pardon me for hammering away at this subject so often—there is no more vital topic, or one more dread with warning.

My big city paper this morning announced two sudden deaths, both from "heart disease." One was the owner of a trained dog troupe, and he was standing on the stage, busy with the performance, when he dropped dead instantly, in full view of the audience. The onlookers at first thought it was a part of the program, until the man was pronounced dead! This paper stated that he was apparently "in perfect health the hour before." Should such terrible happenings be passed up as if they were just news items?

The other fatality was that of a millionaire oil man, and a true philanthropist. He was also just a little past middle age, stricken as by a bolt from the blue sky. Just "heart disease," let it pass...

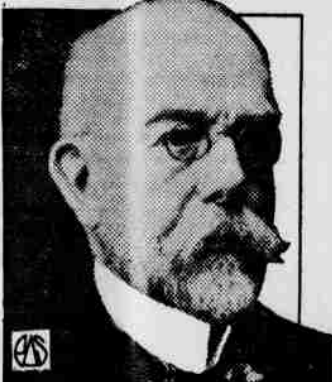

Both of these men died of CARELESS EATING, overloading the stomach at wrong hours, and without any respect for the laws of diet. One was an overworked man—spending his nights at hard business endeavor, in order to make both ends meet. He paid no attention to his bodily requirements; he was exerting himself to the utmost strain, to keep a thin pocket-book nourished. Did it pay?

The millionaire was just resting on his oars; he was satisfied with life, and eating all he could hold, at whatever hours he chose. He dined on the viands that tasted best to him, and in quantity limited only by appetite's demands. And paid with his life. Heart disease! Was it true? A goodly, kindly man, who delighted in providing recreation sports for children. What a pity that he died in the middle of so noble a career!

My good friends, overloading at six o'clock does it.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

MARY A. NOTSON, Reporter.

The experience of Great Britain in trying to obtain revenue from the liquor tax is not very gratifying. The results of the high tax have been to fill the warehouses with a 20 years' supply of whiskey, several distilleries have been closed in Scotland, and the use of "red biddy," a cheap foreign wine and industrial alcohol, has become widespread, with a resulting increase in insanity, according to an article in Collier's for March 12, 1932.

In Canada the government has been asked to close its liquor stores and beer parlors "until times get better" by the Unemployed Married Men's Association of Calgary, Alberta, so the Associated Press reports. This runs contrary to the argument of our wets, who believe the return of beer would give employment to several million persons now idle. Yet, in Canada beer, made and dispensed under what our wets would consider ideal regulations, not only is failing to give employment to the great army of unemployed, but is considered a hindrance in the fight to overcome the depression.—Capper's Weekly.

The talk about the restoration of beer aiding the restoration of employment is absurd. The total number of men employed in the manufacture of beer, wine and distilled liquors before prohibition was only 86,914. The people employed in the retailing of liquors were producing nothing whatever of value, hence they were just as much a burden on the communities as a whole as they would have been if maintained at public expense in the charitable institutions. Not only that, but they were doing a business which crippled industry by rendering less efficient the workers who patronized them. Roger W. Babson, the well-known business economist, says: "There is probably no one factor which would more quickly bring a business panic and a period of unemployment than the nullification of the legislation of prohibition and a return of the saloon."

Every member of congress takes an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, yet 132 members voted to permit the sale of 2.75 per cent beer. They offered as a flimsy excuse that the 3 cent tax upon each bottle would bring in a vast revenue, which is needed at this time. Yet everyone of them knew that they were trying to legalize intoxicating liquor in violation of the Constitution. This 2.75 per cent is by weight, which is equivalent to nearly 3.5 per cent by volume. There is no question as to the stand which will be taken by the courts if the question of whether such beer is in fact intoxicating. It is amazing that 132 men who have been honored by election to the lower house of congress would forget the solemn oath they have taken and vote to legalize beer which is intoxicating. It is well right here to remind these gentlemen that it was the old liquor crowd who years ago wrote into the law the one half of one per cent limit.

Wheat Prices Decline on Account Bearish Rumors

Most of the news interest in the grain markets this week consisted of rumors, denials and more rumors, relative to the foreign marketing of our farm board wheat holdings, says the Portland Grain Exchange report for week ending March 26. This is having more effect on world markets than warranted by the amount of wheat involved, but it is the same old story—one overstocked merchant setting the price. This same wheat, scattered throughout the trade, would insure orderly distribution in foreign markets, without a ripple of apprehension.

There are bright spots in the generally unpleasant picture—Argentina and Australia have been exporting large quantities of wheat and their prices have remained relatively firmer than our own. If this continues and sterling exchange retains its present optimism, there may be a market for our wheat yet.

There was a small amount of new business with California this week but otherwise the local trade was unusually dull, hoping for something constructive to make an appearance.

Portland Futures show net declines for the week, May down 1 1/8c; July down 1 1/2c, and September down 1 1/2c a bushel. Portland, Astoria and Longview visible supply 1,820,282 bushels.

Sunday School Lesson

International Sunday School Lesson for April 3

GOD IN CREATION.

Genesis 1:1-5; 26-31.

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D. D.

Before we can consider an act in time the fact of an adequate cause must be established. The Omnipotent God is that fact. He is the self-existent One. A recently issued book entitled "THE DISCOVERY OF GOD," by James H. Snowden, is most practical and deals with the absolute fact on the basis of science, philosophy and religion. It is very readable for such a profound subject. A comprehensive statement is found in Dummelow's "ONE VOLUME COMMENTARY": "The scientific account of creation has been written by God upon the crust of the earth, and men are slowly spelling it out; but the religious account of creation is written in the first chapter of Genesis, in letters that all can read. Both accounts are from God and should be received accordingly." Get all you can from geology and astronomy. In fact there is no conflict between science and religion. In the end you must accept God as the first Cause and declare as in Genesis 1:1, "God created the heavens and the earth."

Now get the very last word about the order of development of nature as presented by the scientist and you will find that the same order of detail is given in Genesis. Ages of time are indicated by the student of nature but God records the process in a sentence: "And God said, Let there be light; and there was light." In time the earth, just a small bit of the universe, came into its present form. The sea and the dry land were given their appropriate life and birds flew in the air.

The supreme act in creation was man. "In our image, after our likeness" is part of the portraiture. Compare him with the animal life, and a marvellous difference is noted. This was effected by another and independent creative act on the part of Jehovah.
