Disease Communicable,

Tuberculosis is a communicable and not a hereditary disease as is commonly believed, Dr. Payne told the group. It is spread generally through intimate contact of one having the disease with immediate members of the family. Infection Mrs. W. R. Importance of the early diagnosis campaign now being waged by the Oregon Tuberculosis association and public health bodies, was emphasized by Dr. Payne, because it is extremely important that cases of infection be located and proper precautionary measures taken against development of the dis-ease, for once the disease has taken root a long and expensive treatment is necessary to arrest it.

Dr. Payne urged the importance of such organizations as the Morrow County Public Health association, which play an important part in stimulating public consciousness to awareness of the dangers of disease and malsanitation.
