Knowledge Rout Fear of Disease

"T'S old-fashioned to be afraid of tuberculosis," states Dr. H. E. Kleinschmidt, director of health education of the National Tuberculosis Association. "The present generation is coming to know that many of the beliefs of their fathers are groundless."

"There was a time, not a generation ago, when the fear of tuberculosis among the general public amounted to an unreasonable phobia, based on the belief that it was hereditary and therefore a family taint, and that it was necessarily fatal. Often this dread was so wide spread as to result in opposition to the building of sanatoriums. People thought the air of the neighborhood would be contaminated. Pedestrians sometimes took detours to avoid these institutions. In one ignorant community, smoke blown toward the town from the chimneys of the institution almost provoked a panic because it was believed filled with germs.

"Today much of this fear has been dispelled by a more general understanding of just how tuberculosis is contracted. We know that in most instances the germ passes from the sick to the well who are in close contact—often in the same family circle. With proper precautions, which can be explained by any doctor or nurse, there need be little danger of this infection. Now that people no longer dread tuberculosis with the old horror, they are more willing to take the steps which not only mean adequate treatment for the patient, but security from the disease to those who surround him in daily life."

POTATO DISEASES CUT CROP YIELDS

New Bulletin on Virus Troubles Gives Effect of Mosaics on Total Production.

Reduction in potato yields ranging as high as 73 per cent as the result of certain mosaic diseases is reported on in a new bulletin, "Potato Virus Diseases," just published by the Oregon Experiment station. The bulletin reports in detail on results of experiments conducted from 1924 to 1929 with some later work mentioned.

This new bulletin is technical in nature but contains much more detailed information on nine virus diseases than is found in the more popular and inclusive bulletin, "Potato Diseases in Oregon and Their Control." For the man specializing in potato production, especially for seed purposes, this new bulletin by M. E. McKay and T. P. Dykstra is considered valuable.

Definite experiments to find out the most practical method of eliminating virus diseases from seed plots showed that the tuber-unit method of roguing diseased plants from seed plots is the most effective on a large scale. By this means the cut pieces from each tuber are planted consecutively in the row in the private seed plot of the grower. When disease shows up in one hill, all the hills from that tuber are removed whether they show disease or not at that time.

The tests showed reduction in yield amounting to as high as 73 per cent by weight in the case of the spindle tuber disease, 50 per cent with crinkle mosaic, and 19 per cent with interveinal mosaic.

The various virus diseases were found to differ in methods of transmission from plant to plant. Some plant aphids will transmit some of the disease but not others, while at least one kind, rugose mosaic, was found to pass from plant to plant under insect proof cages.

Studies of potato varieties showed them to vary somewhat in susceptibility to virus diseases, and the Irish Cobbler variety was found to possess apparent immunity or high resistance to the mild mosaic. Experimental work is still continuing on these diseases throughout the northwest.
