HEARD IN BEHALF OF FARM BOARD

Charles S. Brown Gives Fine Address at Ione Farmers' Picnic; Maris and Dorman Speak.

A chief feature of the farmers' picnic at Ione on Friday was the address of Charles S. (Farmer) Brown, who spoke on the farm marketing act and its relation to agriculture, to an audience composed principally of wheatgrowers of this county that practically filled the big auditorium of Legion hall. Mr. Brown, who is connected with the national "set-up" of the farm marketing act, is a farmer in the state of Arizona; he is not a wheat raiser, but a producer of head lettuce and other commodities in the vegetable line that find a market in the more populous centers; at one time he was largely engaged in the raising of cattle. He is a speaker of note, and the address was filled from beginning to end with apt illustration of the many points presented, both by blackboard figures and by amusing stories, all of which tended to hold the close attention of his hearers.

"The farmers did not expect the act to be a panacea for all their ills, neither did congress hold this view," stated Mr. Brown. "They expected it to furnish a legislative medium of self-help to protect the farmer from being exploited by the speculator, while the farmer ceases his own organization." Proceeding along this line, the speaker outlined the set-up and told something of how the plan is being carried out. "Through the act the farmer is linked up with the national set-up and becomes a member of the local organization, of which there are 61 in the northwest," the speaker said.

Mr. Brown stressed the fact that the act is non-partisan; not being the child of either major party; very nearly an equal number of republicans and democrats voted for the bill, and those opposing the measure were evenly divided between the two parties.

"There are three fundamental principles only in the bill. First, to minimize legislation; second, to eliminate wasteful practices in distribution; and third, to help the farmers to organize co-operative marketing organizations, farmer owned and farmer operated. In elaboration of this third principle it must be borne in mind that unlike any other business, when the farmer has a surplus it becomes his undoing. Through speculation and unintelligent distribution of commodities, the price of his entire crop is driven down to the price of the surplus.

"The Federal Farm Board is not to be confused with the Farmers National Grain corporation and the Farmers National Warehouse corporation. The Farm Board is appointed by the president and congress and the members serve at a fixed salary of $12,000 each a year. The Farm Board is to the grain and warehouse corporations what the Federal Reserve Board is to the member banks.

"High salaries paid grain and warehouse corporation executives are not paid by the Farm Board but by the organizations themselves, which are made up of farmers." However, the speaker did not enlighten his hearers on this point, and failed to inform them concerning just how much these salaries were.

Having had a lot of experience in getting freight rate adjustments, Mr. Brown spoke in praise of the resolutions presented at the meeting touching upon this point. He also dwelt at some length on the freight and railroad situation, commending the set-up of the interstate commerce commission and its work in the regulation of freights and rail competition. The railroads are an important spoke in the wheel of industry and economy of this country; the tariff is another; restriction of immigration still another, and the last but not least in importance is the Farm Marketing act. Should this spoke be now removed, the great wheel would be seriously weakened and might break down. The thing to do is to keep this act functioning, the speaker asserted.

Paul V. Maris of the extension department of Oregon State college was also an interesting speaker on the program, preceding Mr. Brown. Orris Dorman of the North Pacific Grain Growers also gave a short address in which he stressed membership in the organization of the wheatgrowers of Morrow county, also giving an encouraging report as to the present status of the co-operative in the territory coming under his care.
