EVER HOLIER THAN THOU.

THE MORNING OREGONIAN, admittedly one of the finest newspapers in the United States, is prone as resident head of the university, to keep its editorial head in the clouds. As a general policy this main, the state would be very formight be a good thing, but when tunate. It is to be hoped that the it reaches the point of whitewashing a system fraught with dangers common weal, there is grave room for doubt.

all persons who serve their state in responsible positions without pay. It defames as blackguards any who dare "carp pettily" about any policy or action of such state officials, Such carping is generally based on selfish interests—pooh! pooh! pa! doop!

It is a grand, magnanimous thing for anyone to be so imbued with public spirit as to sacrifice his personal fortunes for the benefit of his fellow men. But the picture is too Christlike. It rises above the heads of mortals.

What is the use of winking at reality? Doubtless many persons do take penurious state jobs from sheer philanthropy. Doubtless many are conscientious in their efforts to do that which is best for everyone. But what incentive is there for them to do so? Especial ly when they are paid only with "petty carping"?

Could not a man be just as con scientious and feel better about doing it, and at the same time be re-lieved from the liability of false accusation, if he were remunerated for his services in accordance with the exactions demanded of him? Certainly giving large sums of money into the keeping of anyone, without giving him protection, is throw-ing temptation in his path in a big way, and it has been known to lead righteous, conscientious men astray,

Yes, ye holy Oregonian editor, this newspaper has been guilty of petty carping. It can only carp pettily, having a comparatively small audience. But it will continue to carp at infractions of the rights of its citizens. Sometimes the smaller the person, the louder he must shout to make himself heard.

A GOOD CHOICE.

THE selection by the state board of higher education of a chancellor to head the state's higher educational institutions is most for tunate. No man has contributed more to higher education in the

10:11-36. Golden Text: Numbers 10:29

The children of Israel occupied about forty years in their wanderings toward the land of promise. It is surprising how uneventful was their wilderness sojourn, although it was of supreme importance in laying the foundations of their religion and culture, and so preparing them for the momentous changes of their later history.

For the most part their life was fairly settled, with headquarters at Kadesh, a holy shrine on the south-ern border of the promised land, with an exceptional spring of water Our lesson describes the departure of the Israelites from Mt. Sinai, where they had camped nearly a year, giving, in detail, the order of the twelve tribes in the route of

Then comes the charming episode of Moses' appeal to the father-inlaw Hobab, elsewhere called Jethro to act as guide. A member of the nomadic clan of Kenites or Midianites, he was thoroughly acquainted with the country through which the chosen people desired to pass. It is evident that he finally yielded to his son-in-law's urgent entreaty despite his initial blunt refusal That his services were not forgot ten is indicated by Saul's counsel many years later, to the Kenites to separate themselves from the ene my he was about to attack, because they, doubtless through Hobab, had been kind to his own folk.
