the wonderful pipe organ recital which is given each day. Lundell told in detail of the building of the roof of the tabernacle. It was built in sections—10 feet wide, 10 feet long and 10 feet thick; these were fastened together on the ground by wooden pegs and then raised to the top of the building by ox and man power. In a pleasing way he wrote much more about the Mormon buildings, the city museum and the capitol. They crossed the Rocky mountains at Monarch pass, altitude 11,286 feet, and Mr. Lundell wrote that the road at this point reminded him of the drive down into Yosemite national park. He complains of finding no good roads since they left Oregon. They drove from Canyon City, Colorado, to Dodge City in one day. The last letter from the party stated that they were then in Missouri, having already visited Mr. Morgan's brother in Coffeyville, Kansas. Will Science Destroy Religion?

"O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding oppositions of science falsely so called."—1 Tim. 6:20. "Science falsely so called." Not true science. From true science religion, the religion of Jesus Christ (Christianity), has nothing to fear. Some so-called scientists, puffed up with vanity, have asserted that science would eventually do away with religion. But no sane scientist, worthy the name scientist, would make such an assertion. Sane scientists never oppose religion, and furthermore do not wish to be known as even thinking that religion will be done away.

Science has destroyed some religious vagaries and fallacies. One has written this on this matter: "Science has destroyed various errors, overwhelmed false credulity, slain ignoble fear, broke the power of omens, charms and signs; and has limited the regions in which religious charlatans and imposters are able to successfully ply their trade." Just so, but true science has never sought to destroy true religion.

William E. Ritter, a scientist eminent in the field of biology, declared that he could not run the risk of supposing, or even being charged with supposing that science might supplant religion. Said he: "Religion is the common magma of all emotional life, as science is of all rational life. Religion is the individual's one great reservoir of spiritual energy, and as such must be freely available for each and every one of his powers of action." And Edwin Grant Conklin, another outstanding biologist, wrote: "It is impossible for a man to live a normal life apart from religious hope and aspirations."

Who, then, is intelligent enough thoughtful can refer religion to mere superstition and tradition, and imagine that it will pass away as science advances? What is of more reality than religion? And where is there any reality more completely verified by the logic of life? If there is any abiding reality; be sure that religion will abide.
