THE "NEW DEAL"

THE GAZETTE TIMES is not among those who believe the country has gone entirely to the bow wows because its candidate for the presidency was not elected. This newspaper supported Mr. Hoover because it conscientiously believed the reins of government would be better treated in his hands.

The "new deal" is at hand. It has a great opportunity for success backed as it is by a great preponderance of public sentiment. In so far as it complies with those principles of government compatible with the ideas held by this newspaper, it shall have its hearty support.

The men who take over the reins of the city government show courage in facing the problems offered. They are entitled to the wholehearted support of our citizenry. We welcome Mr. Anderson as the city's new mayor and offer our cooperation in all measures which may be undertaken for the public good.

Mr. Roosevelt has a great opportunity to impress into the service of the government many leaders in the various industries of the country. May we place in nomination as head of the farm board the editor of our esteemed contemporary, the Pendleton East Oregonian, whose exhaustive study of the wheat situation makes him an apt candidate.

More Grain Being Used To Feed Western Cattle

Use of grain along with hay in fattening beef cattle is now becoming a much more general practice in the west than ever before, says E. L. Potter, head of the animal husbandry department at Oregon State college. Grain has never been fed in the west in any such liberal amounts as is customary in the east, but where a few years back it was unusual for a feeder to use grain at all, now the practice is becoming quite general, he says.

"Where the cornbelt feeder would feed from 15 to 18 pounds of grain and seven and eight pounds of hay a day, the western feeder will give only a third to a half as much grain and three times the quantity of hay," Potter explains. "The bulk of our steers on hay and grain will get from five to eight pounds of grain a day."

"Experimental results at the Livestock Branch Experiment station at Union indicate that five pounds of grain is about the smallest amount that can be fed satisfactorily, while eight pounds has produced in most cases reasonably satisfactory results at lower cost than if larger amounts are used."

"This experimental work has shown that one pound of barley, for example, is equivalent in feeding value to three pounds of good alfalfa hay. Ordinarily the barley will sell for more than three times the price of hay, but last winter was a marked exception to this rule."

"Even with the cheap hay of this coming winter, it is likely that the grain will be less than three times the price of hay, and under such conditions there is likely to be more liberal feeding of grain," Professor Potter added.

Ground or steam rolled barley is an excellent feed, little less valuable than corn, except that a straight combination of barley and alfalfa has a tendency to cause cattle to bloat. Any other mixture of grain with the barley seems to reduce if not actually eliminate this danger, according to Professor Potter.

Under present low hay and beef prices, feeders need to figure on a margin of about one dollar per hundred between feeder and beef prices in order to carry a four to five months feeding period, experiments show. Much data on this and other phases of feeding of beef cattle have been collected at the Union branch station which may be had by any stockman for the asking.

ON OREGON FARMS

Money Saved on Sulfur. Lakeview—Farmers of Lake county recently pooled orders for a carload of soil sulfur which was obtained through the county agent's office. Total cost delivered here was $38.70 a ton, which on the carload amounted to a net saving of $150 to the seven farmers who ordered. Amounts obtained ranged from 1000 pounds to five tons. The sulfur is used mostly as a fertilizer for alfalfa.

Small Clover Patch Pays Well

Grande Ronde—How even a small patch of irrigated Ladino clover can make a great difference on the ordinary farm was demonstrated by the first of the month, affecting a saving of $74 over the year when clover not quite two acres in extent pastured eight cows from April 1 to October 1 except for periods every 10 days when they would be taken off while water was applied and the clover allowed to grow. Ray has 2 more small clover fields coming on which he irrigated by a gravity system laid out with the aid of the Polk county agent.

Testing Costs Cut Down

Ontario—The spray residue testing service carried on here in the chemistry laboratory of the high school had made 76 arsenical tests by the first of the month, affecting a saving of $74 over the year when samples had to be sent into Idaho for testing. The equipment set up for the purpose by the county agent was inspected recently by a federal representative and pronounced entirely accurate and satisfactory.

Tile Drainage Being Installed

Albany—Two farm drainage systems are being installed this winter on the farms of L. Cade and John Buckner in this county. State college representatives made the surveys and the ditches are being dug by a mechanical trencher engaged at Monmouth. Drainage can be installed cheaper now than any time in many years, according to these farmers.

IN OREGON HOMES

Gresham—Using odds and ends of wool, cotton and silk pieces, women in two communities of Multnomah county made 106.7 square feet of hooked rugs and cleared $195.58 on them, according to Francis Clinton, county home demonstration agent. Miss Clinton supervised this project, giving instructions on good design, color and construction.

Lená—A woodbox on the back porch with a slide door opening from it into the kitchen is a time and energy saver reported by a homemaker of Lená, Morrow county, who enrolled last year for the series of letters on "Short cuts in kitchen work" sent out from the home economics extension service of Oregon State college. "The door of the woodbox is in the wall near the kitchen stove," says this housewife. "Now the men don't track in the kitchen while filling the woodbox."

Eugene—A spirit of cooperation and a philosophy of self-help characterizes Lane county citizens, according to Gertrude Show, home demonstration agent. She reports that on one day's notice, the master of 4-Oaks grange and the chairman of the home economics committee, assembled a group of workers and sufficient surplus pears to keep the "portable cannery" busy all day. Approximately 650 cans of fruit was preserved and the entire amount turned over the county court for distribution to the needy this winter. In another instance Ray Bower, a prune grower of Lane county, offered the fruit of his orchard for drying. A group of eight men picked and delivered it to the Eugene Fruit Growers plant where 18,000 pounds of prunes from Bower's and other orchards were dried free of charge.

Mrs. Alfred Medlock was in the city the first of the week, having just returned from a visit to Mr. Medlock at the veterans hospital in Walla Walla. She found Mr. Medlock to be getting along fine.
