A SONG AND A SWORD

"Let the high praises of God be in their mouth; and a two-edged sword in their hand."—Psalm 149-6. Some one has said that songs won the World War. Be that as it may, it is without any doubt the truth that songs did have much to do with winning the tremendous conflict.

It will never be possible to measure or to tell, exactly, just to what extent the issues of that titanic struggle were determined by the one song alone:

"Pack up your troubles in your old kit-bag And smile, smile, smile."

And the value of songs in warfare has long been recognized. For, while military leaders have looked to the sword for actual results, yet they have also counted very largely on songs to stimulate and preserve the morale of their armies.

David was a great warrior. He was also a lover of music and songs. And in his warfare he no doubt employed songs as well as swords! Some one has also said this: "Be aware of that nation whose people go singing to battle."

And in the text above David is thinking of God's people as a spiritual army going singing into battle for God and righteousness: He learned in carnal warfare that the sword is mightier when backed by songs, and so he cries: "Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand."

Men and women are facing these very days problems and battles which they can neither solve nor win except they go to meet them singing through faith in God.

Life is often pictured as a warfare: And it is a great truth that its battles are more successfully fought by those who fight with a sword in their hands as well as a sword in their hearts. If we shall trust and obey God and lean on His word, He will put a new song in our heart, and the great sword of the Spirit in our hands.

Are you at present attending church or Bible school? If not, we very cordially invite you to come and worship with us: Especially do we ask you to mark a place on your calendar for attendance here on Easter Sunday, April 16. LAWMAKING SEEN jazz-orchestra lieutenant governor, visited the Oregon legislature, he was handed the gavel in both the house and senate, and in the course of his wisecracking remarked that the organization of the assemblies in the sister states was quite similar, but that Oregon's has one distinct advantage—that in this state members are permitted to have their beautiful stenographers sit beside them at their desks.

In speaking of the influence at play upon the making of laws, the speaker asserted he had the veil lifted from his eyes concerning alleged corruption, and that it was not near the bogey man which he had believed it before going to Salem. The lobbyists, to which name there has been attached much odium, he believed to serve a real purpose in disseminating information necessary for members to have to vote intelligently.

He graphically illustrated what he considered to be probably the greatest influence, known as the "statehouse atmosphere." The fact that everyone courts the favor of legislators during the session puts them in line for much entertaining, which would take up all of their time if they permitted it. It is a sort of pampering process, tending to make a legislator forget his constituency at home and to inflate him with a high estimation of his own importance unless he is on his guard.

This atmosphere is fostered considerably by the people of Salem who are interested in keeping the state payroll there intact.

The other major influences are the demands from the constituency at home, which every true legislator does his best to represent, and the press comment, much of which is unduly colored to effect some end. From the sidelines one may see all these influences at play, but there are sufficient checks and balances in the system to insure that none shall greatly sway the fair enactment of laws.

A short description of the course a bill takes in becoming a law was given, with an explanation of the closure rule in the house which limits the free introduction of bills after the first twenty days and permits only the introduction of bills sanctioned by the legislation and rules committee, committee bills, or those allowed by a two-thirds vote of the members.

After a bill has been accepted and has passed the legislation and rules committee for correction it comes up for first reading. It is then printed and must be on the desk of members for 24 hours before it comes up for final passage.

After being read the second time it is referred to a committee, or if a committee or emergency bill it may be considered, engrossed and passed to the calendar for third reading and final passage. In committee the bill is gone over section by section, public hearings held if wanted, amended as desired and voted upon. It may be returned with a unanimous recommendation that it do pass or that it do not pass; with a divided report, or without recommendation.

On coming from committee, a vote is first taken on the committee report. If the recommendation is that the bill do not pass and the report is adopted, the bill is indefinitely postponed. If the report on the bill is divided it is necessary to adopt either the majority or minority report, with the question being the substitution of the minority for the majority report, which opens the merits of the bill to debate on the floor. If without recommendation, it becomes necessary for the house or senate to decide whether they want the bill to progress further, which also opens it up for debate. In case the bill is favorably acted upon thus far, it is engrossed as amended and passed to the calendar for third reading.

On being read the third time, the author of the bill or someone closely connected with sponsoring it, first has the privilege of explaining it, which privilege is invariably exercised. A debate may then be had on the merits of the bill, and motions to refer it to committee, to lay it on the table, to indefinitely postpone it, to amend it with unanimous consent, or to go into the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it, are in order. If none of these motions are made to prevail, the roll is called and the vote taken on final passage.

A motion for the previous question closes the debate and allows only the maker of the previous question to speak in closing the debate. Illustrations of some of the points of parliamentary procedure as they occurred in the session were given by the speaker to show how they may sometimes be used to gain an advantage.

It is necessary for a bill to pass both the house and senate, and for each to concur in such amendments as may be made by either house after it leaves the other, and to be signed by the governor before it becomes a law. Many times after a bill has been passed on in either the house or senate, or by both and had even gone to the governor, it was called back for the purpose of amendment or for the reconsideration of the vote by which it had passed. Reconsideration of the vote by which a bill had failed to pass was also taken in some instances, and in one or two of these the bill was passed, as in the case of the Thomas utilities bill on its first trip through the senate. Because of the involved nature of the parliamentary procedure, and the technical language in which bills are couched, the speaker believed that a legally trained mind is a big asset to a legislator.

In closing his talk he complimented the legislative record of Morrow county's representative, J. O. Turner. Every bill fathered by Mr. Turner in the house was passed, with the exception of one. The ill-fated bill had to do with remitting taxes, and was withdrawn late in the session after another bill having the same purpose was passed. The successful bills included four salary readjustment bills for Morrow Gilliam, Sherman and Wheeler counties, two bills affecting corporation law, the amended grain warehouse code, farm storage bill and a memorial on development of the Columbia river for navigation. Representative Turner did not take the floor often, but commanded a hearing whenever he did, said the speaker.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

MARY A. NOTSON, Reporter. Some there are today who are loudly clamoring for wine and beer, declaring that the repeal of the eighteenth amendment is not necessary, only a revision of the Volstead act, so that the alcoholic content may be raised above the maximum of one-half on one percent now stipulated.

The wets suavely declare that the legalization of wine and beer will satisfy everyone who wants to drink, and at the same time will avoid the evils of the old prohibition liquor regime. But here is a fact that smashes all such arguments to smithereens. Nearly 90 percent of all liquor sold by the 177,000 saloons in the old days was beer! The saloons, which almost every one agrees were intolerable institutions, were nine-tenths beer. If we bring back beer, we shall be nine-tenths as bad off as we were before.

The wets may exclaim here, "But we do not intend to sell the beer in saloons!" That's what they said in Canada when they set up the government stores for the sale of liquor; but already, under "wet" pressure, four of the provinces have established "beer parlors" where beer is sold and drunk on the premises. The wets thought that they could disguise the saloons by calling them "parlors"; but these "parlors" have degenerated into the vices of the old saloon, with treating, gambling, soliciting by prostitutes, everywhere carried on, and with "ward heelers," shady politicians, crooks, and criminals making the "beer parlors" their headquarters. Any place where liquor is sold and drunk is a saloon, no matter the label over the door.—Signs of the Times.

It was claimed by the wets that with beer and wine at low prices the consumption of hard liquors would diminish. The latest figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics show a 75 percent increase in the use of whiskey, rum, gin, and brandy in the last eight years. The use of wine and beer has also increased greatly; but their increase has but served to develop an increasing demand for the spirituous liquors.

It is sometimes claimed that France consumes light wines, thus avoiding excesses in the use of spirituous liquors. The fact is that France consumes light wines, thus spirits per capita than did the people of the United States. Germany, although she consumes oceans of beer, drinks more spirits per capita than we did in 1918. Alcohol is a habit forming drug, and the alcohol in beer builds the appetite for stronger drink.
