gradually getting in place and the slips and slides will be less noticeable as time passes.

"Long Beach, Compton and Santa Ana got the brunt of the blow. Los Angeles got a slice and many buildings here are a bit worse for the shake up. But the damage is slight in L. A. Few deaths here and they would not have happened if people had not become panicky. They got bumped off by falling bricks or killed by jumping through windows. These earthquakes are not nearly so bad as floods and tornadoes, if we didn't lose our heads. But no one is in any condition to do sane thinking when they are being shook loose from their false teeth, glasses and what have you. I think the shake up has turned over most of the torpid livers in Southern California and from here out pruned juice, spinach, cod liver oil and even Old General Cathart will not be necessary for some time to come.

"After all the quake is not such a great calamity. The towns will be rebuilt and people will go back to their homes and live happily ever after. The percentage of deaths and property loss is small in comparison with population and investment. Then, too, perhaps it will develop a rubber for building construction—anyway some plastic material will be needed, or they will have to the other kinds of material together better. Public buildings, erected by public graft, seem to be the worst hurt. School buildings especially. And, what a crime! Had it happened a couple of hours earlier, in all probability thousands of children would have been injured, if not killed. To prevent injury the quake was properly timed. Most everyone had left the office and store and were either home or on their way there. Folks riding in cars say they didn't feel the jar.

"We stayed up most of the night so we could experience more shocks and be able to talk intelligently upon all of them the next day. The main conversation now is: 'There, there, did you get that one?' Answer, 'Yes, but it was not so bad as the one last night at 9 o'clock. That one rattled everything in the house.' Etc., etc. We forgot about our closed banks and our inability to cash checks or even eat. We didn't notice when the banks opened and didn't seem to care. All we care to do is stand about in groups and talk 'quake.' Saturday this office began to shake while I was writing a letter. I looked around and no one was present. In less than two seconds I was absent. But I came back and here we are all working away again just as though nothing had happened in our young Christian lives. But here is one I must tell you.

"Sunday night we were down at Hepp's visiting. ('Hep' is Heppner Blackman, native of Heppner and namesake of the city's godfather.) We had turned on the radio to listen to Reba Crawford, who is filling in for Sister Aimee Semple McPherson-Hutton. She had been for two days and nights down in the stricken area. I had met her in Florida and wanted to get her line. She was spending away under a good deal of steam, when all of a sudden our house began to jiggle, the lights danced and the tables did a fair job of jittering. At the same time Reba broke loose shouting to the very top of her voice: 'Sit down! Sing, sing! 'In the Lord I Trust, I Have No Fear', and she repeated it over and over until she finally rocked the choir into the tune and quieted her congregation. After the fuss was over she then told them that if there were any in the house who did not believe God would protect them to quietly slip out and go where they liked. It was dramatic. It was filled with sheer showmanship, yet she prevented a panic and perhaps prevented a stampede that would have cost a life or two.

"Well, I went through the Heppner flood, experienced a Florida hurricane and now I have a California shake chalked up to my experience. I have seen one good war and don't care to see another. I feel exactly the same way about these three experiences. Mable Leezer Bascom, the Blackmans and the rest of we Heppnerites here in L. A. came through O. K. Our nervous systems will probably never calm down, but we will have something to worry about besides financial troubles. And that's sumpin'!"

White Federation Wheat Will Be Tried Out Here

By C. W. SMITH, County Agent. Following up the recommendations made by Prof. G. R. Hyslop, of the Oregon State Agricultural college during the series of meetings held in Morrow county in December, White Federation wheat seed has been secured through the county agent's office and will be given a trial on the O. W. Cutsforth farm, Lexington; Bert Peck, Lexington; Timm Brothers, Ione; A. H. Nelson, Lexington; Ed Ditty, Sand Hollow. White Federation, has yielded on an average as much as has soft Federation in the nursery plots in Morrow county and at the Sherman Branch Experiment station at Moro. This wheat has very good milling qualities as it is high in protein and it makes a white loaf which expands to meet the wishes of the bakers and according to reports from California it has commanded a premium in the markets there. These field plots will be watched closely during the summer and at harvest time the yield made will be checked against soft Federation and bluestem seeded at the same time and grown under identical conditions.

Eight resistant beans and squash will be tried out during the summer by cooperative workers in conjunction with the county agent's office and O'Rourke field peas will be given a thorough trial both under irrigation and under dry land conditions to see if they have a place in the cropping system of this county.

Many inquiries have come to the county agent's office during the past few months regarding crested wheat grass as a pasture plant and more than 100 acres have been planted during the fall of 1932 and this spring. Crested wheat grass plantings have been established at the Ellen Busick Schwartz farm on Skinner creek; Bert Peck, Lexington; Mary Rood Burt, Heppner flat; Walter Jepson, Rhea creek; Ernest Heliker, Ione; Guy Chapin, Hardman; R. A. Thompson, Heppner; Fred Mankin, Ione; Elsie Beach, Lexington, and Sarah White, Lexington. Another lot of seed has been ordered and anyone wishing to try out crested wheat grass on a small scale can get seed at the county agent's office.

the public hearings as one of the things that delay committee progress. In the majority of cases little good comes from these hearings, he said, believing that the better way for a committee to obtain information is for it to call those who wish to discuss the matter in hand singly before it. There is too much time wasted in public hearings by heated debate on extraneous matters by persons on opposite sides of a question.

The short time allotted to Mr. Turner necessitated his cutting short the discussion of measures passed at the session with short reference to the sales tax, and to the legislation waiving penalty and interest on delinquent taxes. Pro- ple will hear plenty about the sales tax before July 21, date of the special election at which they will decide the matter, he said. The measure waiving penalty and interest removes these charges up to the year 1930 and allows payment of the delinquent tax to be made in ten semi-annual payments, with a two percent penalty assessed in case default of one of the payments is made, and requiring foreclosure after default of three payments. This measure in no way affects payment of current taxes.

Mr. Turner gave a short history of this legislation, of which he was the original sponsor. Time for further discussion of bills was allotted him at the next meeting.

government. There was a big program of farm relief four years ago. Yesterday the house of representatives passed another big farm relief measure. Grain trade, not sure whether it should effect an increase or decrease in price, got scared. Net result to farmer; just another kick in the pants.

So far no one seems to be sure just what the new farm relief program is. That is understandable. Any one who has seen lawmaking in progress knows that a bill is yet embryonic when it first gets past the house. Much amending, and often emasculation, is sometimes required to make a bill acceptable.

Just how effeminate this new farm relief will be after congress gets through with it is a matter for conjecture.

Esteemed contemporary as well as wheat authority, Editor Aldrich of "E. O." waxed enthusiastic for a time, then moderated. "It should at least be tried," he loyally brayed like any good independent should.

Spring Crop Outlook Reviewed by Jackman

With the greatest prospective acreage of spring-planted field crops in recent history of the state, because of the destruction to fall crops by freezing, E. R. Jackman, extension crops specialist at Oregon State college, has reviewed the prospect and outlook for these various crops in Oregon so far as present information permits.

Through the eastern Oregon wheat belt the acreage is so vast that about the only possibility is to seed spring wheat despite the low price, as wheat can be sold for something, while heavy increases in oats or barley would merely quit the feed market, Jackman says. Care in replanting red wheats such as Marquis where reds are frozen out, and white wheats such as one of the Federations where white had been sown, is highly important to avoid discounts from mixing.

West of the mountains the situation is different, however, as oats, barley, corn or flax will in most cases bring a better return normally than spring wheat. Early seeding of gray oats or OAC No. 7 barley, or later seeding of Victory oats or Hennechen barley is a good bet, he says.

For home feed especially corn offers the opportunity of the greatest number of pounds at the least cash cost, Jackman adds, as seed cost is negligible and harvesting cost consists mostly of "maybe a plaster for a stiff back after the first day."

Though flax seed is working downward in price compared to recent years, it is still about 2 1-2 times that of wheat, while yields are usually a little better than half that of spring wheat. A ready market in Portland is assured, and seed may be had there at about $1.20 an acre.

The seed crop outlook is promising in the main, Jackman adds. Both alsike and red clover are cleaning up well, and the nationwide agitation to seed low yielding lands to grass and clover is favorable to the future demand for alsike and alfalfa and to some extent red clover. The outlet for Ladino clover is also expanding and good Oregon growers are really making money. Austrian peas and hairy vetch have been damaged to such an extent that low production is in prospect with probably increased demand.
