HANSON HUGHES IS NRA ADVISOR

That they be given the hundred per cent support of loyal buyers." Mr. Hughes announced that local women's committees would be named to secure consumer pledges from all housewives in the county.

Mr. Creel, 5 feet 5 inches of bustling energy, was enthusiastic over the progress of the NRA campaign in the Oregon-Idaho district. He declared that nowhere else in the Pacific coast area was the work so far advanced. Volunteer organizations in the Oregon-Idaho area are working in close harmony with official representatives of the department of commerce, and the campaign here is more than satisfactory, Mr. Creel said.

"This district is weeks ahead of other sections. Your NRA officials have anticipated the plans of the administration, and you have a functioning organization while other areas are merely planning their set-ups," said Mr. Creel. "Now it only remains to complete your organization in areas which have not yet taken an active part."

Mr. Creel was drafted to be the Pacific coast director of NRA publicity by President Roosevelt, whom he knows intimately. He was director of the committee for public information during the war, when the president was assistant secretary of the navy.

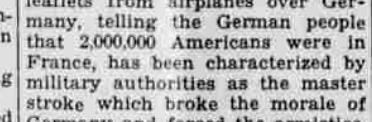

Mr. Creel conceived the organization and publicity which made the most successful success during the conflict, and it was only the cooperation of the civilian population, secured by Mr. Creel through his public information committee, which made possible the speedy termination of the war.

He took an active part in the campaigns which put the Liberty Loan drives over the top, and the work he inaugurated in dropping leaflets from airplanes over Germany, telling the German people that 2,000,000 Americans were in France, has been characterized by military authorities as the master stroke which broke the morale of Germany and forced the armistice.

Mr. Creel has had a long career as a newspaperman and publicist. He was the editor of the Kansas City Independent before he was 23, and was also editor of the Denver Post, Rocky Mountain News and other papers. Since the war he has been a frequent contributor to Collier's, and has written 11 books on politico-economic subjects, including "The Causes of the World War" and "Ireland Fights for Freedom."
