Sit Still Awfully

"Their strength is to sit still." Isaiah 30:7. Sit Still Awfully. This may sound like feeble and very poor advice in this day and age, when all we hear is "hurry, hurry," and "step on it, step on it," and all the other admonishments to keep going at high speed which are shouted on every hand, and in every phase of life.

But not all activity is achievement. Not all motion is progress. So we need to sit still awhile, and get our bearings; and then our motion and our activity will begin to count for something worth while.

How often have we heard, "haste makes waste." Well, that is but too true. What we need to do is to make sure where we are going; make very sure of the best and safest route to where we are going; then we may hurry to our destination without loss of time or motion.

"Their strength is to sit still." We all know that real strength needs exercise for its development; but do we as well know that for real strength and poise, we also need quietness and stillness. There is strength and poise to be gained only in quietness and stillness.

There is also a knowledge to be gained only in stillness. "Be still, and know that I am God." The deeper, more vital truths of life are taught by the "still, small voice," which may not be heard amid too much din and worldly noise. To know life's deeper meaning, we must acquire the habit of silent thinking. "Their strength is to sit still," in the very Presence of God.

If you have not a Church home, we invite you to come and worship with us and test the welcome of this friendly church. We have a live Bible school; you will enjoy it. There is just the class for you here. For the coming Lord's Day the sermon topics are: "The Beginning of the Church." And for the evening service, "Come and See."

Prices . . . up and going up

Prices are going up. That is certain. They are already up, so far as the ordinary necessities of life are concerned.

A good thing for producers of commodities. Eventually, in the natural course of things, a good thing for consumers, since better prices for producers will mean better prices for labor. But wages and salaries are lagging far behind the rise in prices. Everybody must look forward to a long period of hardship.

I do not know why, but retail prices in country towns have gone up much more than in the big cities at least in the East. Bread that used to sell for 6 cents a loaf everywhere is now eight cents in New York and eleven cents in Berkshire county, Mass. Other food products are up in proportion.

If I knew the answer I would publish it. It seems to me that our Government has not moved far enough or fast enough with its public works program.

Gold . . . new valuations

Half of all the gold that has been dug out of the earth since Columbus discovered America has vanished, nobody knows where, according to the Director of the Mint, who has been compiling statistics on the subject. A little more than a thousand million ounces was mined the whole world in 400 years, or about 2 1/2 million ounces a year. Only about half of the total is held by national treasuries and banks. A lot of it lies at the bottom of the sea. Probably a third of the vanished gold is hoarded among the treasures of some of the fabulously rich Indian princes.

Gold is worth more in dollars now than it has been since 1873. The United States has passed Canada and become the second largest producer of gold, South Africa ranking first. Yet with more gold available than ever in history, only France and three or four smaller European countries remain on the gold standard of money.

This is my prediction. Every nation will be off gold within a few months. Then there will be a general world-wide adjustment of currency values on a new gold basis and the next generation will have forgotten that gold was ever as cheap as $21 an ounce.

Land . . . a great teacher

The announcement from Washington that the Federal Government proposes to spend billions in building homes for industrial workers, each with its acre or two of land to be tilled, takes me back to my boyhood, when I used to hear my mother sing a song that was popular when she was a girl, before the Civil War. The refrain was:

"For Uncle Sam is rich enough To give us all a farm." Farming was the ideal mode of life for most people in those days, when young American men and women cherished their independence above everything else. Nobody expected to get rich at farming, but it was a way to live one's own life and bring up a family comfortably and happily. And there never was any question of how to spend leisure time;—there wasn't any leisure.

The best characters and the most self-reliant strain in our American life came off that sort of farm. I think it would be a magnificent thing for our national "morale" if every boy and girl today had to live and work on the land for a few years, or part of every year.

Machado . . . and our banks

A friend of mine who owns a big New York hotel told me the other day that General Machado, the former President of Cuba, had applied to him for rooms by the year for himself and family; twenty people in all, including servants. My friend turned him down because his other guests would feel nervous, lest some Cuban bomb-thrower might take a notion to "get" the General some night.

Most Latin-American ex-presidents go to Paris to live when they retire or are forced out of office. Machado's predecessor, General Menocal, has been living in this country for many years and has lately gone back to Cuba, where he has friends who would like to see him back in the Palace. Judging by the recent disclosures of the amazing financial relations between New York banks and Cuban presidents, the people of that unhappy island seem to me to have been mercilessly exploited for the enrichment of their rulers and their banking allies.

Hell . . . Mary Ellen's advice

It takes a long memory to recall the time when Mary Elizabeth Lease of Medicine Lodge was counselling the Kansas farmers to trade their cows for shotguns and begin to raise "less corn and more hell!" Mrs. Lease and Kansas both leaped into national fame. Everybody called her "Mary Ellen," though her middle name was Elizabeth.

That was when the Populists were demanding direct election of Senators, postal savings bank, Federal supervision of railroads, Federal supervision of corporations, the initiative and referendum, the income tax, woman suffrage, prohibition and free silver. Mrs. Lease died the other day, but she had lived to see them all come about except free silver, and I have a distinct feeling that if she had lived a few months longer she would have seen that, too.

In view of present conditions among the farmers it would seem as if Mrs. Lease's advice had been taken and remembered. Sometimes it looks as if there were an overproduction of the commodity she advised the Kansas farmers to raise.

Dairy Sire Management Discussed in Bulletin

Oregon dairymen are far better than the average of the country in the matter of using high quality herd sires, yet not more than one out of three dairy bulls in the state are handled in a manner to insure long use of the bull and safety to the handler.

This information was obtained from a study of cost and management records of close to 500 Oregon owned dairy bulls carried on by the dairy and farm management departments of Oregon State college. The information was collected as a "by-product" of the comprehensive three-year cost of production study made by the agricultural experiment station.

Results of the study regarding dairy bulls have now been assembled and combined with the information obtained in the handling of dairy sires at the experiment station and all published as a new station bulletin, entitled, "Cost of Keeping Dairy Herd Sires and Suggestions on Their Selection and Management." The bulletin is by H. E. Selby and I. R. Jones, and may be had free by Oregon citizens.

Seventy per cent of the dairy herds of Oregon studied in the survey are headed by registered purebred bulls, and 19 per cent were headed by bulls which, according to the owner, were subject to registry. This leaves only 11 per cent of the herds where grade or scrub animals are used. This is a much higher percentage of good bulls than is found in the country as a whole.

As to management of bulls, however, Oregon dairymen leave much to be desired. It was found that approximately two-thirds of the bulls in the state are handled in such a manner as to become poor breeders at an early stage. Only a few dairymen have facilities for keeping a proven sire in service for a long period of time.

The bulletin shows that the higher priced bulls are, on the average, a better investment; that the sire expense is a small part of the cost of production, and that proper management facilities may be provided at a small cost.

How to Avoid Loss From Pullorum Disease Is Told

The mere expression, "tested stock," as applied to baby chicks or hatching eggs has no real significance in protecting the buyer from getting chicks infested with pullorum (contagious white diarrhoea) unless the nature of the testing and action thereafter are also known.

This warning is given in a new Oregon Experiment station bulletin dealing with all the practical phases of this widespread disease and was written by Dr. W. T. Johnson and E. M. Dickinson, poultry pathologists at the state college.

The Oregon Experiment station has been carrying on extensive research with this disease for eight years and the present bulletin, the first put out there dealing with the malady, contains a digest of all the latest information needed by flock raisers.

owners of hatcherymen in avoiding losses from this almost universal trouble.

In addition to determining merely that stock has been tested, a buyer needs to know whether a reliable test has been used, and whether a test report is available to substantiate it, the bulletin explains. Other pertinent questions are: Have all the fowls been tested? Are the flocks free from infection? Have any reactors been removed? Are the testing results being nullified by hatching eggs from infected stock with those from free stock?
