

Local Happenings

Charley Klinger, north-Lexington wheat farmer who finds it profitable to market his wheat in the form of turkeys, transacted business in the city Saturday. Mr. Klinger has maintained a large flock of turkeys on his farm for several years and by feeding them the wheat instead of marketing it directly, he says he has received considerably above the market prices for his wheat each year. Of course the turkeys require attention and special care, but he believes they are well worth it.

From out north of Lexington came two leading wheat growers to the city Monday. Orville Cutsforth and Alfred Nelson, they were, both of whom believed in plowing the proper medicine in subduing windblows in the light soil of their region. They reported their neighbor, George White, was just finishing reseeded of a large field, the first seeding of which was almost a total loss when the heavy winds of a few weeks ago literally blew the seed from the field.

Charlie Groshens, a native Heppner boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Groshens, was in the city Sunday on business and enjoyed greeting old-time Heppner friends. He runs a garage and service station business in Portland, where his parents also reside, and reported his folks to be in good health and enjoying life. His father, a former Heppner business man, is a capable rock mason, and much of his work contributed to the upbuilding of Heppner.

Chas. Jayne, who for many years was a resident of this community, died at his home near Umatilla in Umatilla county on January 12, at the age of 68. Mr. Jayne had a small place at Umatilla and had been making his home there for several years past. He is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Jennie Elder and Mrs. Gertrude Vance, and two brothers, Oscar and Harry Jayne, the latter residing at Boardman.

Mr. and Mrs. Joel R. Benton returned home on Friday evening from Spokane. Upon reaching that city they learned that Miss Ruth Benton, his sister, was somewhat recovered from her sudden illness and they felt it was not necessary for them to go on to Billings, Montana. Miss Benton is still quite ill, however, but at last reports was improving.

Bert Mason, merchant at Ione for to these many years, came to Heppner Monday to be in on the opening of the bank and make the acquaintance of the new force now on the job at the First National building, and to extend a hearty welcome to our new institution. Home Cleaning Methods For Suede Jackets Told

Suede jackets, so popular nowadays, can be easily and economically cleaned at home, says Mrs. Azalea Sager, extension specialist in clothing at Oregon State college. She offers the following suggestions:

Work out of doors or on an open porch. Warm one quart of cleaning solvent by placing it and its container in a vessel of warm water. When warm, add two table-spoons of melted paraffin. Do not heat the solvent on the stove. Place the vessel of warm water on the porch or out of doors before placing the solvent container in it. It is not necessary to keep the solvent warm after the paraffin is added.

Cover the table or working surface with wrapping paper and place the jacket on this. Clean one section of the coat at a time. Slightly moisten white cornmeal with the solvent and paraffin mixture and sprinkle over the coat surface. Brush the meal back and forth over the coat with a wire brush. A suede shoe brush is good for this, and a porous rubber sponge may be used part of the time in place of the wire brush. Do not rub too vigorously.

Repeat the process until the jacket is clean, being careful not to soak the leather with the solvent. Finish cleaning by brushing clean dry cornmeal back and forth over the section just finished to absorb the surface solvent.

Place the jacket on a hanger in a warm place to dry and deodorize. When entirely dry, go over the surface with a rubber sponge and then brush the jacket in one direction with a wire brush.

The solvent will remove only dirt which has a grease base. Other stains such as fruit dyes or protein substances which have penetrated the leather cannot be removed by this method.
