Lambs Contract Paralysis From Docking Infections

An increase in paralysis among young lambs can frequently be traced to the practice of not thoroughly disinfecting the wound left in docking, according to investigations made by Dr. J. N. Shaw, assistant veterinarian at Oregon State college.

Organisms frequently enter the spinal tract from this wound and cause abscesses which in turn bring on paralysis. Several recent post mortems performed on lambs revealed these abscesses at various points along the back almost to the neck.

Growers who follow the old practice of using turpentine on the wound in docking do not get effective disinfection, says Dr. Shaw. Sheep dip or any other standard disinfectant will serve, while turpentine does nothing more than possibly relieve the soreness.

LEXINGTON

By BEULAH B. NICHOLS.

Laurel Beach motored to La Grande Friday evening to be present for the Eastern Oregon Music festival which was held in that city on Saturday evening.

An interesting program of music and readings, under the direction of Mrs. Lillian Turner, was presented before the grange meeting Saturday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cox, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Turner, W. B. Tucker and Foster Odum were given the obligations of the order. Chas. W. Lawrence Beach gave a talk on the inland waterways association, the object of which is to develop the Columbia river for navigation in order to reduce freight rates. Mr. Beach believes that barge locks in the Bonneville dam would not increase the navigability of the Columbia river for the people of the interior to any great extent. By building sealsacks and improving the river above, the difference between having world markets and being shut out of them will be enjoyed, he stated.

After the meeting a social hour was enjoyed with Mrs. A. H. Nelson, Mrs. Harry Dingus, Mrs. S. J. Devine, Mrs. R. B. Rice and Mrs. John Miller as hostesses. Refreshments of pie and coffee were served.

Farm-Debt Adjustment Making Good Progress

Substantial progress has been made with the farm-debt adjustment program of the Oregon Agricultural Advisory council through the county farm-debt adjustment committees, according to O. M. Plummer, Portland, state chairman, and L. R. Breithaupt, Oregon State college, secretary. Already in 1934, it is estimated that the committees have assisted in one way or another with over 1,000 cases.

Another indicator of the volume of work coming to these committees is the fact that the federal land bank of Spokane has referred approximately 750 cases to the Oregon county committees for help. All of these cases arose from the necessity for making adjustments in order that the old debts of the farmer may be liquidated with the money that can be borrowed on a new loan.

The county committees assist by giving information to distressed debtors and creditors, and by conducting hearings and making recommendations. Much work remains to be done in completing cases already started and on numerous cases yet to be registered, the state committee reports.

The voluntary farm-debt adjustment committee plan is now in use in 39 states and in over 1900 counties in the United States. The committees are without legal status, but work without compensation in a neighborly way to help people solve difficult financial problems. They are assisting materially to prevent unnecessary and severe actions of debtors and creditors toward each other, and aiding in the government program for refinancing farmers.

County wheat production control associations in Oregon will soon begin selecting local inspectors to examine each farm under contract to see if the agreed reduction of acreage and the required seeding has taken place. These inspectors will all be local men and will be trained briefly in special schools.

There will be about one inspector to each 100 farms. Their salaries will be set and paid by the county association, which will probably encourage economy. Second payment of the 1933 cash benefit will await the completion of the inspection during May and June.

put a powerful pump on it, and could pump up enough water to keep two reservoirs fairly full. That must have been a pretty powerful pump, because it sucked all the water out of my well, and did ditto with the wells of John Natter and Ellis Minor, further north along the same bench. Well, what of it? Beer is back, so why should we need any more drinking water?

Counties to Get Funds For Grasshopper Fight

Oregon counties that are facing a possible serious grasshopper infestation this year will be enabled to obtain federal assistance to carry on eradication work under the terms of a recent appropriation. A committee headed by Paul V. Maris, director of extension at Oregon State college, has been appointed by W. A. Schoenfeld, dean of agriculture, to set up organizations in the counties to bring about the cooperative control work. This was done on instructions from Washington.

Early indications were that Klamath, Lake, Deschutes and possibly Harney would be the counties seeking this federal assistance. It is open to any county where grasshoppers threaten to become a major menace to crops. Eradication work must be carried on, however, on a community basis. The federal funds are to be devoted largely to purchase of supplies for poisoning operations.

Successful control work was carried on in Klamath county for several years under a plan worked out by the county agent and experiment station entomologists, but county funds for carrying on the campaign have not lately been available.

Oregon Vegetable Expert Notes California Methods

A. G. B. Bouquet, head of the vegetable crops section at Oregon State college, has just returned from California where he spent a two-months leave of absence observing methods of mass production and marketing of truck crops in that state. The industry has grown there to an enormous size, providing a supply for shipping the year-around to outside states and inexpensive vegetables for home consumption which are widely used, he reports. Some other observations follow.

Green pea production, as in Oregon, is becoming centered in the coast region. The same is true of green artichokes.

Oregon celery compares most favorably in size, color and quality with that grown in the Sacramento delta region and the peat lands of San Diego county.

Carrots have increased in popularity with the consuming public so rapidly that the crop is now grown in huge quantities in the last few years. They are shipped to many parts of the country.

Southern growers take unusual precautions to protect and "forward" plants that are to be forced along as rapidly as possible. Oregon growers often faced with unfavorable early weather conditions might well take a leaf from the southern growers' book in this respect, Professor Bouquet believes.

Home gardeners appear to be the exception rather than the rule in California, even among farmers. In this respect, Oregon farmers seem to be more self-sustaining.

The commercial vegetable growers and shippers there have depended much upon the help of state and federal research workers in solving their many problems of disease control, varietal breeding and selection, soil fertility problems and the like.

In the Imperial valley 22,000 acres of lettuce is being grown, and 14,000 acres more in the Salinas valley. New York No. 12 and Imperial F are the varieties used in the bulk of the plantings.

Record Early Spring Keeps Botanist Busy

Eugene.—Specimens of early spring flowers and plants from all over the state are wanted for the University of Oregon herbarium, it is stated by Professor Louis F. Henderson, curator, but due to the rush of work brought on by this early spring, Professor Henderson will not be able, for a few weeks, to answer in detail all questions asked by generous Oregon citizens who send in these specimens. As soon as the tremendous task of preserving and classifying these plants is caught up, however, Mr. Henderson will answer requests, he says.

Flowers and plants may be sent in dried or fresh, says Mr. Henderson, and should be wrapped so that they will not be injured in handling. A complete record of where picked, date gathered and other details should be included, he says.

At present Mr. Henderson plans to concentrate his activities in Lane county, and will make as complete a record as possible of early blooms and plants in this area. He has been a botanist for more than 60 years.

Dallas.—Extensive applications of sodium Chlorate for killing Canada thistle are being made in Polk county this year, according to County Agent J. R. Beck, who reports that 20 farmers have purchased a total of 2800 pounds of this chemical this spring.
