Life's Needs "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before you ask Him." Matt. 6-8.

The question here is not what we WANT, but what we really NEED. Probably more persons are worried about money matters today than for generations past.

But Jesus Christ does offer a great, sustaining and comforting truth, that the Heavenly Father is interested in the lot of every last one of us; and that He will by actual God-providences, meet the REAL NEEDS of us all; the trouble is, that by far the greater number of earth's peoples have their backs turned on God till He has no opportunity to be gracious to them; but be sure of this:

God has not let go of His world; and He has not allowed His children to slip out of His hand. Do you have a Church home? If not, we invite you to come and worship with us. For the coming Lord's day the sermon topics will be: For the morning service, "The Incarnation." And for the evening service, "Rainbow of Promise."

SEEING THE ROCKIES

glamorous by a wealthy historical and geographical background. It was partly to see the Rockies from the top of a boxcar that the writer prevailed upon the good graces of a friendly sheepman to take him along as a helper with a sheep shipment to summer range in Montana.

Sheepmen moving sheep to Montana have plenty to think about without worrying over cracked heads. In this particular shipment an added complication arose when some of Bob Thompson's sheep got mixed inadvertently with some of Garnet Barratt's sheep. Mr. Thompson had not expected to ship until the next day, but after several cars had been loaded with the mixed sheep there was little to do except for him to load the rest and go along. Fortunately he was destined for the same unloading point, Spotted Robe, but unfortunately the sheep had to be separated upon arrival.

The sheep left Heppner shortly after 1 o'clock last Thursday morning. At Umatilla a three-hour stop was made to assist in loading some 20 cars of Charley Bartholomew's sheep to help make up the train.

The Barratt and Thompson sheep were unloaded at Spotted Robe shortly after noon, Friday—Bartholomew's going on to Blackfoot for unloading. The boys worked until 9 o'clock that night attempting to separate the sheep, but had to give up until next morning. The sheep were too pestered out to mind. When morning came the separation was accomplished in much shorter order, but it had been an arduous job for the boys.

The sheep made the trip through in very good shape, only a few head being lost out of the several thousand shipped. But a day and a half without provender makes most any kind of a critter gaunt, and sheep are no exception.

When the sheep are first taken from the cars they must be handled carefully. They scour for a time at best, and if too restless they are not particular in their victuals, and may eat poisonous plants, among them lupine which thrives in Montana the same as in Oregon. A number of intricate problems are thus afforded the man shipping his sheep a great distance. But the big problem confronting the sheepman is that his sheep, and his men as well, never cease eating, drinking and sleeping and he must be a constant provider.

On the Montana range the problem is simple so far as the sheep are concerned. The mile upon mile of verdant rolling Rocky mountain foothills included in the Glacier national park, afford a sheep's paradise for feed. Melted snow lakes in the bottom of almost every dip eliminate the watering problem entirely, and there are no bedding-out rules to prevent the sheep sleeping wherever the herder pleases. Aside from the poison problem, there are only two threats to the sheep's safety. One is the danger of cold squalls which have been known to hit as late as the middle of July and as early as the fourth of September, and the other coyotes, against which herders carry guns constantly.

In the case of the men, the problem in Montana does not appear so complicated either when one sees the way in which it is taken care of by the Morrow county men. A number of the local sheepmen having some 15,000 acres of deeded and leased land among them have turned the camp-tending job over to Henry Krebs. Mr. Krebs and Mr. Barratt are interested in a large headquarters ranch located right on the railroad at Spotted Robe, where Mr. Krebs and his family will make their home for the summer. The headquarters ranch is equipped with good buildings and is conveniently located. Mr. Krebs having sheep of his own, and a long time, successful acquaintance with the "game," is well qualified for the big job given him. He has a light pick-up car, suited to the job of servicing the camps, which are fitted out to be handled with such a rig.

Instead of establishing the herders in tents as is largely done in Oregon, the Morrow county men have rigged out camp wagons built on automobile chassis with rubber tires. These are conveniently equipped for the comfort of the herders and are easily pulled from one camp to another, obviating the necessity of tearing down and putting up a camp every time a move is made. Among the comfortably situated local herders under Mr. Krebs are Lawrence Elder, Harry Shipley, Billy Knighten, Hubert Van Scholack and Joe Howell. Claude Hill is with the Charley Bartholomew sheep. The absence of trees and brush generally makes herding of the sheep quite simple, though the herder is given little protection from the sun, rain and wind—and the wind blows heavily at times—except for his covered wagon. The rugged peaks of the Rockies, with snow in the crevices streaking their sides form an admirable background in a semi-circle to the west, a view which any herder would hardly tire of admiring in a short grazing season.

Lawrence A. Davidson, son of Mrs. Mabel Davidson of Ione, is a patient at Heppner hospital while recovering from an operation for rupture performed the first of the week.
