A Summer Recreation Program for Oregon

By DR. JOHN F. BOVARD, Dean and Director of Physical Education, University of Oregon.

(Editor's Note: This is the second of a series of three articles outlining a summer recreation program for communities of the state, written by Dr. Bovard, nationally recognized as an authority in the field of physical education. The next article will follow in a later issue.)

Part III: Developing and Managing the Program.

How can a program such as this be managed and developed? Of course the most important factor is the leadership. Without this little can be done and no satisfactory result can be expected. Where finances permit recreation leaders and directors can be brought in to help the town to get what it wants. Sometimes it takes an outsider to discover the talents that are already there and to provide the enthusiasm and leadership necessary to bring this out. Paid leadership even for a short time is a great saving of energy on the part of the best people. Paid leadership adds to the safety of any program because a trained director of recreational activities has studied out the best ways and means for carrying out programs of this sort.

However, where this is not possible, almost every town will have people of enthusiasm who are willing to give their time to a good cause. The main point is not to be too ambitious—do what can be done. Over-reaching leads to disappointment and makes the work harder for the next year.

Just a word, then, on how to start such a summer recreation program as has been suggested. First, call together those people you think might be interested. Some group such as the P. T. A., the park and playground committee of the city council, school officials or the chamber of commerce could be responsible for getting this group together. Don't neglect any groups, get all who like activities and who have a community spirit.

Second, discuss but don't decide what would be good for the town in general. Get all of the ideas possible. Have a secretary present, elected pro tem, to take down these ideas as they are expressed.

Third, elect a small executive committee that will formulate a program that will stay within reasonable limits, that will not be too ambitious, but will be interested in seeing that something is actually accomplished.

Fourth, have this executive committee then bring back a report to the general group on what they think can be done. Include any others who may have been interested as a result of this discussion. It is important that the executive committee get the support and backing of a large number of people and no program should be undertaken without this backing and support.

Fifth, the executive committee should pick leaders for these sports or recreational activities with the greatest of care. Get those who understand the techniques, if possible. Use volunteer help if necessary and if available.

Sixth, put on your program those activities only for which you have leaders and which can be backed by this general recreation group. Leaders for the activities cannot do the job alone, the group responsibility is absolutely necessary.

Seventh, check up again with the larger group after the season is over and after the activities have had a fair trial and see what criticisms will make for a better program next year.

Eighth, keep an account of the summer program in writing, its participation, its successes, and any suggestions you might have for another year.

Perhaps a word or two of general advice of another sort might not be amiss. First and foremost, do not attempt too much in the way of physical plant for your activities. Fix up what places you have; if a school yard, make it do the thing you want it to do in your general program. Second, if it is a "swimming hole" or a river bank, make it safe, put up warnings, mark the dangerous places, put up bulletins on resuscitation methods, build a safe and adequate spring board, provide a place for younger as well as older people. Third, if it is a picnic grounds, make them safe, make them attractive, put in fireplaces to eliminate the hazard of uncontrolled fire.

Any city which is to grow and develop should develop scientifically. If mistakes are made in the early plans of the city, those mistakes will only be worse as time goes on. City planning, then, means facing thoughtfully what lies ahead.

Dead Men's Bones. "And it came to pass, as they were burying a man—they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha; and when the man was let down and touched the bones of Elisha, he revived and stood up on his feet." 2nd Kings, 13-21.

There is something peculiarly significant in this recital. A life revived from apparent death by the utmost of scientific effort is marvelous enough; but a life revived thru touching a dead man's bones, that is truly something to give pause to the most shallow-minded and frivolous; and it makes us think, soberly, on how much of the world's life today has come from the bones of dead men.

"The human race is driven by a sort of divine urge to climb higher and higher," says a writer, who adds:

"And always its upward trend is over dead men's bones." And the remarkable thing is that there have been so many men who have shown a willingness to add their bones to the pile already cast up by those who have sacrificed before, for the good of the world; so that those who come after them can go on to a greater life and a greater civilization.

When the great airship, the Shenandoah, was wrecked and a number of lives were lost, the court of inquiry reporting on the matter said, "The disaster is part of the price that must inevitably be paid in the development of any new and hazardous art." And from the bones of those brave men who lost their lives in that disaster will come, indeed, is already coming, a new day in the great art of flying with heavier-than-air craft. It is over dead men's bones that progress in every phase of life is made. All the benefits we enjoy today, material and otherwise, bear the price mark of lives sacrificed in the interest of progress. And the first sacrifice was made to build the foundation on which rests everything else. CHRISTIANITY.

If you have not a Church home, come and worship with us. For the coming Lord's Day the morning sermon topic will be, "God's Power to Keep." At the evening hour a union service in the Church of Christ with Minister Joseph Pope of the Methodist church bringing the message.

It is certainly true that a new social order is at hand. More leisure time will demand recreational programs and recreational programs will demand recreational facilities, parks, playgrounds, swimming pools and these should be provided in the city planning.

Where can information be obtained which will be of use to those who are interested in developing summer programs in recreation? There are two sources: the Oregon State college maintains home demonstration agents in every county, who have considerable information and are constantly promoting this type of activity; and the National Recreation Association of New York City maintains a special service which not only aids in the development of the recreational facilities but is helpful in planning programs of all sorts, and offers literature on games, sports, dramatics, every phase of this work at cost. The League of Oregon Cities, which sponsors this program, maintains an office and an executive secretary at the University of Oregon, and those who care to address this office will be given information as to where the materials desired can be found.

Order of dismissal was entered in case of Morrow County Abstract and Title Co. vs. D. O. and M. D. Justus.

Besides the indictments returned by the grand jury, it made other recommendations as follows: "We have examined the account of the prohibition fund and find it regular and correct."

"We recommend that the expense for the field work of the assessor's office be put upon a mileage basis and the bills for such expense be presented monthly to the county court."

"We recommend that all rentals for leased county property be paid directly to the county treasurer."

"We recommend that the petty cash account be replenished monthly by warrant authorized at the county court for such amount as may be estimated to meet the petty cash expenditures, and that said petty cash account be examined and passed upon at the regular monthly meeting of the county court."

"We recommend that the county clerk discontinue the practice of maintaining a county clerk's account in any bank."

"There are some matters which have been brought to our attention which we are unable to investigate as the evidence is not available within the time at our disposal before the opening of the next term of court."

FALSE ECONOMY.

(From Hood River News)

Every once in awhile a legislator, making debut at Salem, casts near and far in the hope of being able to sponsor an economy bill which will bring him undying fame. He thinks of a number of possibilities, only to find that he may be treading on some other legislator's toes and, at the same time, impairing his chances for votes on any bill he may introduce in behalf of his own electors. If he is wise, he then abandons hope insofar as general economy measures are concerned.

But if he is lacking in wisdom, he probes deeper and finally decides that there would be real economy in a bill to prevent publication in newspapers of county court proceedings and other information as to how taxpayers' money is being expended, and he has high hopes for the success of such a measure until wiser heads swamp it.

Through the columns of newspapers we learn of scandals and defalcations on the part of public officials and, while the newspapers do not report this angle, it inevitably transpires that these scandals and defalcations would not have been possible had it not been that the light of publicity was extinguished, and the resultant darkness made it easy for an erring official to get deeply into the taxpayers' pocket an impartial accountant presented his report to the grand jury.

It may cost a small sum of money each month to keep taxpayers informed on the various channels through which public monies are expended, but officials who have nothing to hide welcome the opportunity to keep taxpayers informed on this vitally important matter. Any wise taxpayer will not support at any time any measure which would conceal from them an itemized balance sheet of income and expenditure of the various public departments through which their money goes.
