be avoided.

There may have been naught in the evidence to even indicate criminal intent, but there was much to show that officials have been remiss in their duties. The trial has arousd a more vigilant public which will expect better reports in the future.

And compliance with the law in giving regular and complete reports of the county's business, as required in the publication of county court proceedings and semi-annual reports of the offices of clerk, treasurer and sheriff, will alleviate much suspicion and tend to re-engender public confidence in its officials.
