Wealth and Confidence.

CALVIN COOLIDGE, in his last written epistle published in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post, advanced a theory that confidence is a necessary adjunct to wealth.

That destruction of confidence means the destruction of wealth is amply testified to by experiences of the recent depression. As people became alarmed over the stock market crash, money went into hiding.

On every hand people were heard to ask, "Why is it that people are starving in a land of plenty? We have as much money as we ever had. There is an abundance of raw commodities. People are needing everything."

Masses of the people blindly condemned the administrative head of government for their plight. They even charged the president with conniving to rob them of their livelihoods.

Actually the governmental measures taken have had little effect in the upswing except as they have served to engender confidence in the people.

One thing people generally are beginning to realize about the measures taken by the New Deal is that they are costly. People are beginning to ask, "How are all the big bond issues, the increased government payrolls, the greater government expense on every hand, to be paid off?"

The freshmen initiation of the high school was held Friday evening. After the freshmen were initiated into the mysteries of the high school, dancing was enjoyed and lunch was served.

improve living conditions, yet, to relieve this class of property means throwing a heavier burden on another producing property.

New Dealers say the bill for recovery will be easily paid when business gets going as it will go when all their measures get to work.

Mr. Coolidge also wisely said, "America does not need a new government, or a different form of government, what it needs is wise changing in places where needed of the government we already have to meet ever changing conditions."

STATE CAPITAL NEWS

Election Forecasts Educational Relief Debt Certificates

By A. L. LINDBECK

SALEM—Just another month until the voters of Oregon will go to the polls to elect a new set of officials to administer the affairs of the state.

At this moment the entire political picture is shrouded in uncertainty, particularly with respect to gubernatorial prospects, with proponents of all three of the major candidates claiming the advantage for their favorite.

The one significant thing that stands out in the situation is that both the Republicans and Democrats insist that Zimmerman is the man they have to beat, although both camps, naturally, place their particular candidate out in front with the Progressive-Independent in second place and the standard bearer of the other party a poor third.

From which it can be added at least that Zimmerman is a real threat to the gubernatorial ambitions of the regular party nominees in a good chance as either of the regulars for election.

Capitalizing on this situation the leaders of the Republican camp have already started a well organized drive in an effort to herd the stragglers into their fold. Joe Dunne, they say, is gaining ground rapidly while General Martin is slipping badly, in fact is already definitely out of the picture so that if Zimmerman is to be defeated and the state saved from the menace of a radical administration it must be done under the leadership of Dunne.

To which the Democrats, on their part, reply that the doughy general is only now beginning to fight, that while there has apparently been a slump in Martin stock the past two weeks it was only the calm before the storm of real campaigning that is just now getting under way; that, in truth Martin is still the stronger of the two party nominees and the leader to whom the conservative element of the state must pin its faith and hope if Zimmerman is to be headed in his race for the governorship.

And there you have the picture except for this little added touch—that while the Republicans and Democrats are sniping at each other, each intent on gaining advantage at the cost of the other, the Progressive forces are going right along paddling their own canoe and hoping that the bushwacking campaign between the major political parties will continue, for if it does there can be but one result, the election of Zimmerman for governor.

From all three camps come promises of new developments within the week calculated to strengthen the work of their respective candidates. Joe Dunne, admittedly the best personal campaigner of the three, will continue his hand-shaking, public-speaking tour of the state for another two weeks after which he will concentrate his efforts in Multnomah county. Martin, it is understood, has finally peeled his coat, rolled up his sleeves and started out on a real honest-to-goodness campaign in the interests of law and order.

From the Zimmerman camp come rumors that the three big "Progressive" candidates in the recent primary campaign—Holman, Brown and Mahoney—are about ready to come out publicly and unqualifiedly in support of the Progressive candidate in statements urging their followers to enroll under the Zimmerman banner.

While there are only four weeks remaining of the campaign many things can happen in that time. Public sentiment has not yet been crystallized and thousands of voters will not make up their minds as to their choice until the final week before the election. Political leaders recognizing this situation can be expected to make the most of the opportunity presented in the crucial four weeks just ahead.

State police arrested 412 motorists for violation of traffic laws during August. Fifty-eight of the arrests were for reckless driving and 35 more for driving while drunk. Warnings were issued to 9687 motorists for minor infractions of the rules of the road.

LET'S QUIT KILLING

While most enforcement and educational efforts of the state-wide "Let's Quit Killing" safety drive of the Oregon State Motor association, P. T. A., American Legion and other groups are being directed against drivers of automobiles which during the first eight months of 1934 killed 190 persons and injured 3068 in the state, sponsors of the campaign this week issued a "code" for pedestrians, observance of which it is believed will help reduce Oregon's terrific accident toll.

Approximately 50 percent of accident fatalities are pedestrians, it was pointed out. Following are seven rules contained in the pedestrian's "code":

- 1. Never cross streets between intersections. 2. Do not cross streets in front of oncoming cars at night, especially if wearing dark clothes or the weather is rainy. 3. Remember it is easier for a pedestrian than for the driver of an auto weighing more than a ton, to make a sudden stop. 4. Don't step into the street from between parked cars. 5. When crossing a street in traffic, don't oscillate "like a sewing machine shuttle"—proceed slowly and steadily ahead so motorists may know which way you are going. 6. Give consideration to the fact that pedestrians are permitted to walk on both sidewalks and streets, while the motorist is required to remain between curb limits. 7. Always walk on the left side of a highway, facing traffic; step off the pavement when a car passes you.
