Walter Lippmann, noted journal-ist, was one of President Roosevelt's staunchest supporters in the last presidential campaign. It matters not whether his talents were purchased by the party's campaign committee. In the current issue of the "American" magazine, he gives a lucid analysis of the trend of the New Deal as it should be. He says the loose powers given the Presi-dent by the last Congress, which had the effect of instilling confidence in the people of the nation at the time, are now delaying recovery because of the uncentainty in the minds of the people as to how these powers may be used. It is time, he says, for Congress to take back unto itself the lawmaking powers delegated to it by the Constitution.

Lippmann's analysis is reasonable to anyone who understands the plight of the nation today. P more and more as time for the general election on November 6 draws near. One black more
