Your Dollar and Mine.

ASSERTING that repudiation of the gold clause in public and private contracts is legally wrong, the supreme court of the United States Tuesday upheld such repudiation by congress, with the added assumption that there is nothing that can be done about it.

A question at issue was whether the constitutional right of contract should hold precedence over the constitutional power of congress to control the currency.

The court's decision upholds the New Deal monetary policy. What effect it will have in the future on the individual's right of contract remains to be seen.

Whether or not abrogation of the gold clause was illegal and unmoral, and whether or not public necessity demanded such action on the part of congress, the fact remains that the action was taken.

The decision withal was a gem of judicial wisdom, reflecting credit upon the highest court of the land. That Charles Evans Hughes, chief justice and former republican candidate for the presidency, cast the vote which tipped the balances in favor of the decision, exonerates him from any accusation of being party-controlled.

Whether or not abrogation of the gold clause was illegal and unmoral, and whether or not public necessity demanded such action on the part of congress, the fact remains that the action was taken.

Had the court reversed the act of congress, a raid on the gold in the government treasury was imminent. There would have been caused to exist a double-standard of currency, with a mad scramble to divert the species of lesser value into that of greater value.

The effect of the decision is that anyone who contracted indebtedness before the dollar was devaluated may pay off that indebtedness to all intents and purposes, it is estimated that $75,000,000,000 of private indebtedness, and some $22,000,000,000 of government indebtedness was marked off the slate.

So far as the silver dollar in anyone's possession is concerned, it is not affected, immediately and materially, at least. It is still worth 100 cents, 10 dimes, or 20 nickels, and may be exchanged for any commodity at the price quoted.

The trend is inflationary. It should prove of benefit to the extent that it facilitates the interchangeability of goods. But should the inflation reach a point where a wheelbarrow load of dollars is required to buy a loaf of bread, it will be bad.

What is now needed is for congress to get the currency on a stabilized basis and to encourage the dollars into productive industry instead of entangling them into tax-free bonds and in turn spending them on unproductive white elephants.

Local rumor this week has it that Papa Dionne is suing Mama Dionne for a divorce. It is said the complaint charges she is overbearing.

Another wisecracker says the quintuplets are just the result of a five-year plan gone wrong.

Then there is the fellow who arose to remark, "It is lucky the quintuplets were born across the Canadian border for Wallace would have plowed them under."

Not to be outdone in speculation, a small boy hearing his parents discuss the Dionnets piped in with, "Mama, what would happen if a king had twins?"

When the rain was descending yesterday, Lee Sprinkel, local townswoman, was accosted by a fellow townswoman: "Say, what is your name anyway, Rain or Sprinkel?" Lee was glad to inform him that it had changed to rain.

BOARDMAN

By RACHEL J. BARLOW

Land Terracing Part of Soil Erosion Program

More than 3,500 miles of erosion control terraces—sufficient to span the entire breadth of the United States—have been completed under the direction of the Soil Erosion Service on its demonstration projects throughout the country, it was announced today.

In making public the field reports, Mr. Bennett emphasized that terracing constitutes only one factor in the coordinated program of erosion control now being carried out by the Soil Erosion Service. Much of the land in the country, he explained, is not adaptable to terracing. In many instances vegetation methods of erosion control, such as strip-cropping and revegetation of denuded slopes, are more effective and at the same time less expensive for the farmer.

The erosion control program in the northwest is centered around vegetative covering and soil building practices. Tests have shown that while terracing would be possible in many sections, it is much more practical in the northwest to stress the grass-legume seedings and a better farming system. These facts point out again that the soil erosion control program varies with each locality and must be looked upon as a conservation program, the carrying out of which will mean a more profitable permanent agriculture.
