REDINGTON RITES HELD (Continued from First Page)

Col. Redington returned to Heppner to once again acquire the Gazette. He later sold to Michel and Warnock. He was connected with the Portland Oregonian for a number of years, with a Pasadena daily in 1907 and with the Los Angeles Times.

Two of Col. Redington's daughters followed in his journalistic footsteps, Miss Bernice Redington, who is widely known throughout the Northwest as Prudence Penny of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, and Margaret Redington Reid, associate editor of the Wasco (Calif.) News and the Shafter (Calif.) Progress.

Col. Redington lived life with a zest. If he was ever despondent no one knew and though he had been a constant sufferer for more than two years, he never complained. He joked with the nurses and attendants and always had a lively story ready for friends.

He described the operation which severed the first leg a few months before his death with a few words that left his listeners in a fit of laughter. A few days before his passing when he was informed that the doctors thought his case serious and that he would perhaps not survive long, his retort was: "So the Doc says I'm about to go out, eh? Well, it is pretty tough to have to kick the bucket with a sore toe."

The day before he was critically stricken—and at a time when he realized the end was fast approaching—he called an attendant to his bed and said: "I wish you would call Hep and Garfield, I want to see the boys before I go." His message reached us too late. When we arrived at the hospital he had fallen into a coma. We recognized immediately that he was riding with death. A few minutes after 1 o'clock his spirit rode out to the great open spaces of the Pacific Northwest—the home of his heart for more than 50 years.
