Agriculture Fools Bills Says Perkins; Cost to Apple Industry Last Year Cited.

(This is one of a series of articles prepared by the Oregon Producers and Shippers association dealing with the labor situation as it exists in Oregon today, and its effects upon the agricultural producers and shippers of this state.—Editor.)

(By W. H. Perkins)

Ontario, Ore., May 23.—No fair-minded person will deny to labor the right to organize and to bargain collectively for the procurement of favorable wages and working conditions, but when labor organizations become dominated and controlled by well-paid leaders who prey both upon the working man and the public, the welfare of the entire state is endangered.

The labor situation in Oregon today is tense. Thousands of employees of the sawmills and logging camps are out on strike. Our gigantic lumber industry is practically closed down. The situation along the Portland waterfront is smouldering and may flame into a paralyzing strike at any moment. Oregon agriculture has every reason to be seriously alarmed.

The unthinking may ask why agriculture concerns itself with a situation which affects the lumber industry. The proven answer is that agriculture suffers a tremendous financial injury—an injury which it can ill afford to bear.

The devastating effects of the Pacific Coast longshoremen's strike last summer are still fresh in the minds of every producer and shipper in the state. Agriculture, which was not directly concerned with the source of that labor dispute, suffered a loss of many millions of dollars in Oregon alone.

Let us consider losses suffered in the Hood River valley alone as a result of last year's strike. These growers ship approximately 1,500,000 boxes of apples each shipping season.

Some three months after the close of the longshoremen's strike last year, the fruit growers made a careful investigation of shipping costs. Their findings showed that although the longshoremen had been granted increased wages and shorter working hours, yet they went out on a strike. In dollars and cents, their findings showed that after the strike it cost them $127.09 to load 6000 boxes of apples, whereas before the strike it cost them $101.60 to load 8000 boxes of apples.

Not only in fruit, but in all other forms of agricultural products, increased costs of handling, shipping and marketing are always passed back to the producer, who must foot the bill.

This is but one instance of the heavy financial losses suffered by agricultural producers last year. The strike was called just as the wool growers were shipping their many thousands of tons of fine Oregon wool to the world markets. Many carloads were held up in transit. Numerous growers lost markets they had arranged for their wool, and many of the eastern Oregon clips which could have been sold last summer at a fair price, are still piled high in local or Portland warehouses, with the growers facing almost certain financial ruin.

Oregon agriculture finally has become aroused. It is determined to protect itself, not against legiti-mate organized labor, but against the oil-tongued leader who fattens financially upon labor discord and disunion. In years past, the voice of agriculture has been inarticulate, but for self-protection and self-preservation it is determined now to fight for its very existence.

Enlarged Summer Session Announced at Corvallis

A greatly increased interest is being shown in the coming summer session and post-session at Oregon State college. Although it is still early and the catalog has not yet been sent out, records in the office of Dean M. E. Smith, director of the session, show that inquiries have already been received from 30 states and three foreign countries.

Summer session proper will run from June 24 to August 2, and the post-session from August 5 to August 30. This will be the first regular post-session to be held at O. S. C. It will offer courses in education and science, and will be entirely self-supporting, as required by the state board of higher education.

Students are able to earn nine credits in summer session, and six in the post-session. Thus for the first time, teachers from Washington and other states where they are required to earn 15 credits during the summer will be able to obtain them at Oregon State college, Dean Smith says.

Dr. W. E. Blatz, director of St. George's School for Child Study at the University of Toronto, will be on the home economics staff again this year. Dr. Blatz is an international authority on child development, family relationships and parent education, who gained wide popularity among those students attending his classes at the 1934 summer session.

Other visiting professors for this summer session will include Lester Love, junior dean of education at Ohio university; Mrs. Ella Wilson, dean of girls at Franklin high school, Portland; A. C. Tagg, director of industrial arts education for the public schools of Dearborn, Mich.; Miss Edith Rhyme, an authority in the field of clothing, textiles and related arts; Dr. Beatrice Geiger, foods and nutrition specialist; and O. D. Adams, state director of vocational education.

The athletic coaching school, which alternates between Oregon State college and the University of Oregon, will be held at O. S. C. this summer with local coaches in charge.

An out-of-hours program of readings, music and lectures will be a part of the session, as usual, as will the organization of week-end trips to points of scenic and recreational interest.

The Women's Foreign Missionary society of the Methodist church will meet at the church next Tuesday afternoon at 2:30. A full attendance is desired as this is Thank Offering day, also an Extension Department program. Please note the time of the meeting is a week in advance of its scheduled time in order that financial reports may be sent to headquarters in time.

Joe Batty was in town from the Eight Mile farm on Tuesday.

Monorail day services set Saturday at Elgin Temple.

Mrs. John Rodgers, mother of Mrs. C. W. McMenner, passes at Prescott, Wash., May 21.

Archie Padberg and Miss Susan Albrecht married May 17 at home of bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Albrecht.

J. H. Gemmill family enjoyed reunion Sunday.
