

Drying Foods Said Good Supplement of Canning

A supply of dried fruits and vegetables in addition to the canned ones not only offers a greater variety in the winter menu but saves expense for jars and labor in canning, says Miss Lucy A. Case, extension specialist in foods and nutrition at Oregon State college.

Almost any food can be preserved by drying. Miss Case points out, but of course some are much more delicious than others. Dried corn is a favorite of many people, some of whom prefer it to canned corn. Dried pears, apples, prunes, peaches and apricots can be rehydrated or "soaked up" and made into sauce, pies, fruit cobblers and filling for upside-down cakes, or used in various other ways.

Some people, Miss Case says, have a special liking for dried berries in spite of the seeds and use them in puddings, sauces, cookies and for flavoring many other foods. Even tomatoes can be cooked down and dried in a sheet and furnish excellent flavoring for stews, soups, macaroni and other dishes. Although so much exposure to the air probably destroys the much-boasted vitamin content of the tomato, the minerals in dried products are much more concentrated, Miss Case explains. Dried fruits rank high in iron content, she says.

The hot summer sunshine, the heat from a stove, or a rapid current of air furnished by a fan may be used for drying foods, says Miss Case. The color of green vegetables or other products that oxidize readily is improved by blanching them in boiling water for 2 to 5 minutes before drying. Most fruits and vegetables are peeled and sliced or cubed to facilitate drying, and then placed in thin layers on racks, trays or plates. The most desirable drying temperature is from 140 to 150 degrees Fahrenheit.

Drying time varies with the thickness and texture of the product. Dried fruits should be leathery and pliable, and dried vegetables brittle but not baked or scorched. To test a drying product, break it in two at the thickest part. If no moisture can be squeezed from the broken end it is sufficiently dry. It is then conditioned for three days, reheated and sealed in paper bags or boxes, to exclude insects. It is well to examine and reheat them every few months.

Directions for constructing a home-made drier, and detailed directions for drying, conditioning and storing 16 different fruits and vegetables are contained in Extension bulletin 479, "Home Food Preservation," which may be had free from county extension offices or from the state college at Corvallis.

Four Big Farm Meetings Occur at OSC in August

Four major agricultural events, some affecting all western states and some Oregon and the Willamette valley, are scheduled for successive dates in the middle of August, all centering around Oregon State college at Corvallis. The list follows:

August 12 and 13—Annual convention of Western Farm Economics association.

August 14-16—Western States Agricultural Research conference.

August 19 and 20—Silver anniversary convention of Oregon Reclamation congress.

August 21 and 22—Annual Willamette Valley irrigation tour.

The first event will bring agricultural economists from educational institutions throughout the western states to OSC to discuss in general the relation of economic theory to present agricultural programs, land planning, production control, marketing agreements and research programs.

The second conference is called by the United States department of agriculture for official research leaders in the 11 western states.

It is to be the technical half of a regional conference, the general section of which will meet in Logan, Utah, 10 days later. The Corvallis session is to prepare a summary of results to date on the new type of research determined upon nationally at regional conferences last March.

This research contemplates greater emphasis on the study of adjustments in farming by regions and the study of the type of farming areas from the standpoint of agricultural adjustment and planning, including soil conservation.

Unusual interest attaches this year to the Oregon Reclamation congress convention as it will be the twenty-fifth annual meeting of that body, which combines the former irrigation and drainage associations. Many significant developments are up for consideration this year, says President R. W. Sawyer of Bend. The Willamette project committee will meet with the congress the second day.

Starting from Corvallis the morning after the reclamation meeting adjourns, the sixth annual Willamette valley irrigation tour will begin with the first day spent in Lane county where new projects both large and small are in operation this year. The second day will be spent in Polk, Yamhill and Washington counties viewing both old and new projects.

Lost Your Pep?HELP GET IT BACK

Don't Let Avoidable Stomach, Liver, or Kidney Disorders Rob You of the Joy of Living.

Your "pep" is the measure of your physical condition. Upon it depends much of your success and enjoyment of life. Thousands are finding wonderful help in the return of that glorious feeling of health and vigor by use of Williams S.L.K. Formula. This remarkable prescription was selected by a druggist from literally thousands written by physicians.

It was one which he noted was refilled year after year. So remarkable were the results reported by sufferers that he gained permission from the physician to have this formula compounded for the use of the public generally.

Many of the most enthusiastic in their praise of Williams S.L.K. Formula had been to hospitals and specialists without satisfactory results.

C. E. Jeffries, Neosho, Mo., writes: "I spent $1,100 trying to get relief from my indigestion and stomach trouble but had to live on a liquid diet. After three bottles of Williams S.L.K. Formula I felt like a new man and could eat anything I wanted."

Williams S.L.K. Formula is recommended widely for stomach, liver and kidney disorders as are associated with dyspepsia, biliousness, gassy stomach, distress after eating, heartburn, sour stomach, constipation, neuralgia, rheumatism, lame back and general weakness. Ask your druggist about this wonderful preparation today. Williams S.L.K. Formula is sold by Patterson & Son Drug Store and they will refund your money if you are not delighted with the results.
