

STATE CAPITAL NEWS

Possible Veto Same Makin's

By A. L. LINDBECK

Salem.—There appears to be a serious possibility of a stalemate over the state capitol issue. Governor Martin in his message to the legislature declared himself as unalterably opposed to the erection of a new state house on the old site.

In either event there would be no new capitol as a result of the special session, or at least not for some time. While Grange representatives hint at a referendum to carry the capitol site issue to the people, any such program could easily be defeated merely by attaching the emergency clause to the capitol construction bill.

Four capitol bills are now before the senate and house committees dealing with this subject. Two of these—one by Senator Burke and the other by the joint committee—provide for reconstruction on the old site; a second committee bill provides for construction on an enlarged site including Williams university campus; the third committee bill provides for construction of the new state house on the Candalaria Heights site, south of Salem.

Sentiment among the legislators appears to favor the old site, with the expansionists divided as between the campus and Candalaria. State Treasurer Holman has publicly declared himself as emphatically opposed to any more interest bearing debts. The people of Oregon, he points out, are now paying $10,000,000 a year on the combined public debt of the state, counties, school districts and other subdivisions.

The State Planning Board has notified Governor Martin that it intends to make a careful study of the present properties and needs of state institutions for future physical improvements, "so that future construction may be thoughtfully programmed in advance and carried out in orderly sequence as funds are provided."

Harry Corbett, president of the state senate, and Clint Haight, representative from Grant county, have at least one interest in common. Neither use tailor made cigarettes. Both roll their own and use the same brand of "makins," a brand said to be almost universally used by cowboys and men of the prairie country generally. One day this week a messenger from the senate made his way to the desk of Representative Haight with an important looking package. Opened it was found to contain a sock of Haight's favorite cigarette tobacco and a package of papers with the compliments of the senate president.

Smoke rolling up the elevator shaft from the basement of the supreme court building during the noon hour created quite a commotion among officials and employees who happened to be on the job at that time of day. The blaze, starting from an overheated motor, was quickly extinguished with but little loss or damage.

Miss Harriet C. Long, state librarian, does not want the supreme court building for a library, as has been suggested. The building, she points out, is not suited to library purposes and any attempt to remodel it would only be perpetuating inefficiency.

State Treasurer Holman has suggested the creation of a revolving fund of the various cash surpluses which his department has on hand in order to facilitate the use of this cash for any legitimate state function. At the present time the state's cash surplus in the numerous funds handled by the treasury department aggregates nearly $10,000,000, most of which is lying idle in banks without earning any interest.

Petitions for three initiative measures will soon be in circulation about the state. These include the proposed constitutional amendment requiring annual elections, sponsored by W. P. Wagon, of Portland, and the state grange power bill and state bank bill, both sponsored by the State Grange and the Federation of Labor. Ballot titles for all three have just been completed by Attorney General Van Winkle.

to the session, he found sentiment overwhelmingly against the consideration of any legislation other than that concerned with the capitol building construction.

"While our association and many other state-wide agricultural organizations affiliated with us feel there is urgent need for legislation to bring about compulsory arbitration of labor disputes, we are willing to defer to the wishes of Governor Martin and postpone consideration of such measures until the next regular session," he said.

There is strong indication that many of the bills being introduced will be indefinitely postponed in committees to which they are referred and that the calendar in both branches will be cleared for extended and careful consideration of the capitol building program.

Fewer Auto Deaths Recorded This Year

Oregon's auto fatality record was neither aided nor impaired by the results of September motor vehicle travel on the highways, as the same number of persons, 24, were killed during the month in both 1934 and 1935, reports Earl Snell, secretary of state.

"However, the fatality record for the year of 1935 is 17.7 per cent better than during the preceding year," adds the secretary. "Forty lives have been saved this year through the cooperation of users of the highways, enforcement officers, organizations and movements to promote safety, and continued publicity to the need for greater care and caution on the roads and streets of the state."

Want Legislation Held Down to Capitol Issue

Salem, Oct. 31. (Special)—Determined to support Governor Martin in his desire to have the special legislative session consider nothing but emergency legislation relative to the new capitol building, the Oregon Producers and Shippers association will not cause any legislation to be introduced at this session.

This announcement was made here today by W. H. Perkins, manager of the association, following conferences with numerous up-state legislators. Perkins said that in a recent trip over the state prior
