Home With the Bacon.

WHEN telegraphic news came shortly after noon Saturday of the school band's winning the class D division at the state band contest in Corvallis, a celebration was staged second only to that held when news was received of coming in of the first artesian well. At least that is the comparison made by one businessman.

Joy did reign supreme. One telegram recipient went up Main street waving the epistle and shouting the good news. Two ladies were heard shouting the tidings across the street to each other. Telephones buzzed. Heppner's boys and girls had led their field.

Our citizens are justly proud of the showing the band made, and the band members and their director are entitled to much thanks and credit for bringing recognition to the city. It was an accomplishment of which all may be proud.

The laurels are not empty. They were well earned. The competition was keen in a field of nine bands. Neither were the laurels gained by mere good fortune or luck. Band members and director have toiled hard outside of school hours to attain the perfection which brought them the recognition. Winning the contest might be said to be merely a natural sequence of the hours and hours of practice and drill which were undergone to prepare for the contest. There is, nevertheless, great satisfaction in knowing that those hours were rewarded.

It is fitting that citizens of the community tender the band the banquet and reception being staged this evening. The members and director should be told the city's appreciation in no uncertain terms. And it is to be hoped that the occasion will act as stimulus to the boys and girls for further effort, reminding them that in this as in all things, work well done brings its own reward.

Good music, like good literature, is a vehicle for expression of the higher intellect. It contributes to the cultural life of the community, and brings happiness. It satisfies a craving of the soul, and its attainment crowds man's baser nature into the background. Thus is good music, like that made by the school band, a contributing influence for the better in the community.

Battle the Beetles.

EXTERMINATION of Heppner's many shade trees of the elm species is imminent if immediate steps are not taken to kill the beetles with which they have become infested. This fact has caused the city budgeters to set aside an amount for spraying all trees in the city. And with time for the work at hand, the city council has made preparations for a spraying campaign in which it is hoped to spray every elm tree in the city.

No cost to taxpayers will be made other than the individual's share of the city tax levied for the purpose. However, the city dads are asking that all elm tree owners cooperate to the extent of topping their trees out to a height not to exceed 25 feet.

Based on experience of campaigns elsewhere, it is expected that the campaign will result in complete eradication of the elm tree pest, and save the many beautiful and necessary trees of the species within the city.

There is no need to emphasize the importance of shade trees to the city in the summertime. The vigilance and wise action of the city dads in safeguarding the trees is to be commended. Everyone should cooperate readily.
