SALEM.—Do you want lower taxes? Are you in favor of greater economy in governmental expenditures? Are you of the opinion that a lot of offices, boards and commissions should be abolished?

Members of the state board of medical examiners found little sympathy at the hand of the board of control when they appealed from a ruling of the budget department reducing their per diem pay from $10 to $6 a day.

Requirements for admission to the Oregon bar were increased by the supreme court this week. Hereafter applicants for a law diploma must have graduated from a three year course in a recognized law school and have taken two years of pre-law or general college work.

More than 200 architects will present plans for the new Oregon capitol building according to Alton John Bassett, secretary to the capitol reconstruction commission.

Overpayments totaling more than $3600 to state aided institutions have been revealed in an audit just completed by the state department, according to Wallace S. Wharton, executive secretary to Governor Martin.

Members of the state board of medical examiners found little sympathy at the hand of the board of control when they appealed from a ruling of the budget department reducing their per diem pay from $10 to $6 a day.

While many candidates have resorted to such old favorites as "lower taxes," "efficiency and economy" and "honest and impartial law enforcement" many new and original promises are to be found in this year's platforms.

Three more initiative measures made their appearance on the political horizon this week. One, sponsored by the Eagles lodge, would provide pensions ranging from $5 to $45 a month to needy persons 65 years of age or over.

Oregon republicans do not propose to let the democrats get away with any political plums without a fight, according to Lowell C. Paget, president of the Oregon republican club.
