Tomorrow's Election.

MORE than the usual number of IVI anxious candidates await the outcome of tomorrow's election; and especially in the republican ranks are there contests for county offices the outcome of which will leave some good official timber unused. Fo the public good it is a healthful fact that good men have been drawn into the race to compete against each other, though 't is discouraging to the good man to

The fact that the voters have the opportunity to choose good men to carry the party banners in the fall election, and the further fact that there are many important offices to be filled should cause the electorate to respond in a lively way at the

The election will determine the tenor of Oregon voters in two important ways. It will show to a degree how this state stands in se-lection of the next occupant of the White House, and it will further show how much of a political issue the Townsend plan has become in this state.

The presidential issue will not be so clear cut with republicans and democrats each having but one candidate's name appearing for the high office. However, the temper of the people will be reflected to a degree in their choice of convention delegates and national committeemen, and in their vote on snators and rpresentative in congress. is in the latter races, also, that the strength of Townsendism will be

It is the Townsend issue that has political prognosticators guessing as to the outcome of tomorrow's election. The only offices that is sue should affect, however, are the congressional offices. Other offices have nothing to do with enactment of the Townsend plan into law, and candidates for other offices who have sought votes through its endorsement are readily marked as political opportunists.
