S. C. Three new sprinkler irrigation systems for this purpose are now being installed there, he reports, and indications are that several more will be added before the season is over.

HIGHWAY BEAUTY OBJECT OF PLAN. State Planning Board Working On Preservation Roadside Timber; Morrow Included. A comprehensive, state-wide, workable plan to preserve timber bordering Oregon highways will be sought by the Oregon State Planning board, according to word received by members of the Morrow county planning commission from Ormond R. Bean, state board chairman. Members of the Morrow commission and others in this county are expected to cooperate with the state board on the project, it was stated.

The study, which will be under the direction of a committee headed by C. J. Buck, regional forester and member of the planning board, will have a three-fold purpose: 1. To develop the underlying considerations upon which a broad state-wide policy to protect timber bordering roadsides can be made. 2. To make an inventory, classification and valuation of the timber bordering highways. 3. To analyze functions and responsibilities of various public agencies, to make recommendations as to zones where each agency should function, and to recommend needed legislation.

Cooperation of the forestry, recreation and transportation divisions of the planning board will be enlisted in the study project, and assistance will be obtained from the U. S. forest service, bureau of public roads, state highway commission and others. WPA workers assigned to the planning board will be used for compilation and other detail work. Data now being obtained by a field investigation of timber along highways by the state highway commission will be made available for the board's study, it was stated by Sam Boardman, of the state highway commission.

The study will seek to determine a standard of roads meriting timber border preservation, width of timber border strips, rehabilitation of cut over lands, policies for fire protection, and will work out a rating system to cover scenic and other classifications, Mr. Buck states. The physical inventory will include a list of highways meriting consideration, ownership data of border timber, classification of quality timber, compilation of maps showing ownership and other factors, and volume and cost estimates of timber involved.

A review of the present legal authority of the U. S. forest service, state park board, national park service, state highway commission, county courts and other agencies will be included. Needed legislation or revised administrative practices for each agency to function efficiently will also be studied and recommendations made. The study is regarded as one of the most important before the planning board, Mr. Bean says. A report on the study will be made available when the project is completed.

Special OSC Broadcast Brings Eastern Inquiries. That the story of Oregon's vast natural resources and the relation of the land grant college to them was favorably received throughout the United States is indicated in the hearty response in letters and telegrams received at Oregon State college following the recent National Farm hour program furnished by the college to the NBC nationwide hookup. Aside from messages of praise for the music of the band, glee club and soloists, there have been letters of inquiry concerning higher educational possibilities here in Oregon and even some inquiring about investment opportunities from listeners as far east as Kentucky, reports C. R. Briggs, farm program director of KOAC, who handled the preparation of the program.

Gifts High in Value Are Given OSC In Past Year. Gifts and grants totaling $158,358.19, not including the PWA grant toward the construction of the new health service building, were listed this year at commencement time as having been received during the past year by various divisions of Oregon State college or for work carried on throughout the state under direction of the college. The largest of the items listed are under federal emergency cooperation projects aimed primarily to provide employment, but which resulted in valuable additions to campus equipment and service. Among the items listed under this head are $38,207 for employment of needy students, the institution receiving the benefit of the work performed; $48,885 for campus WPA projects; and $28,097 for statewide WPA research work directed by college specialists. The larger gifts to the library totaled more than $5000, and to the school of science for research, $22,295. Private gifts for research under the school of agriculture aggregated $8,638, while gifts or indefinite loans of equipment to the school of engineering amounted to $8145.14. School of pharmacy gifts were listed at $629.20, and the division of physical education for men, $250. Many contributions to the Horner museum of the Oregon country and to the school of science herbarium were listed without definite valuation.

Oregon Class 1 Rates For ACP Above Average. Oregon counties as a whole fared well in the setting of Class 1 rates under the new federal agricultural conservation program, reports F. L. Ballard, vice-director of extension at O. S. C., who was in Washington at the time the rates were decided upon. The fact that average yields of staple crops in Oregon are considerably higher than the national average served to put the basic rates per acre for most counties above the 10 national average.

Farmers in most sections of the country have responded even more heartily than expected to the new program, Ballard found, despite the admitted weak points it contains largely as a result of the haste necessary in developing and introducing it. Plans are already well under way for the 1937 program in which it is believed the weak spots in the present plan will be fairly well worked out as a result of the longer period available for planning.

Oregon to Test Program For Older Rural Youth

A extension program for the special benefit of rural youth past the 4-H club and Smith-Hughes ages will be tried this fall in Tillamook Union and two other Oregon counties still to be selected, according to announcement by F. L. Ballard, vice-director of extension, upon his return from Washington, D. C. recently. Mr. Ballard is a member of a special committee of the Land Grant College association which is working out a national program of extension work in this field. It is apparent, said Mr. Ballard, that extension projects with this group will be developed from a combination of certain features of all existing projects aimed toward the needs and capacities of the age group roughly considered as from 18 to 25. Rather than create any new administrative units for specialized personnel, extension specialists in the established subject matter fields will probably be encouraged to adapt part of their presentations for this special group. Recreation and social features are expected to hold an important part in the new program.

Single Plants Basis of New Stock OREGON CITY — Cecil Chapman, strawberry grower of Oregon City, is building up a valuable planting of certified disease-free strawberry stock which he started a couple of years ago from a single plant. Dr. S. M. Zeller, O. S. C. plant pathologist, considers the stock among the best in the state. Most of the existing certified stock of the Marshall variety in Oregon had its source in nine plants retained by Dr. S. M. Zeller after discarding all of the remainder in an original selected group of 250 plants.

Oregon Dairy Breeders Lead All With Records. The Pacific northwest holds more world and other high record dairy cows for all breeds combined than any other section of the country, while Oregon stands at the top of the list in respect to Jersey cattle records and has several world records in other breeds. H. N. Colman of Oregon State college, in charge of official testing in Oregon, is authority for this statement, and he lists the following honors held by Oregon Jersey breeders at present. Six of the possible world records for the 365-day Class A and AA records. Four of the possible eight world records for the 305-day Class A and AA records. Ten of the 30 twenty-thousand pound milk producers. Nat Kimball, land salesman for Federal land bank, was in the city yesterday from his headquarters at Pendleton. Watch Headlights. Headlights should be checked daily to make sure that both lights are in working order. A simple way to do this is to turn the lights on before backing from the garage, suggests the Oregon State Motor association. The reflection on the garage wall will show whether both lights are burning.
