Poultry Feeding Guide

Issued at O. S. College

Poultry feeding for egg quality as well as quantity is strongly advocated in a new extension bulletin, "Feeding for Egg Production," by F. E. Fox, associate professor of poultry husbandry at O. S. C. The bulletin contains established principles and rations for poultry feeding and handling brought up to date with the addition of recent findings.

"Oregon produces a surplus of eggs, which must compete in distant markets on a specified quality basis with eggs from all parts of the nation," Fox points out. "Careless use of feeds that are known to have objectionable effect on interior quality is damaging to the industry, even if practiced by only a few poultrymen."

Excessive feeding of highly pigmented feeds such as kale, rape, rye pasture, yellow corn, and certain weeds like Shepherd's purse, mustard, and pennycress will give undesirable color to the egg yolk. Similar complications with the yolk, egg flavor or color of the white may be caused by excessive feeding of cottonseed meal, onions, fish and fish oils. Fox does not advocate the elimination of these feeds entirely, but urges care in their use in the ration.

He did not know what kind of a varmint bit him, but the results were quite painful. He was bitten just above the ankle, and the whole foot swelled as a result, accompanied by some fever. While on the job at the grocery store again the first of the week, he was still suffering some from the effects.

Sing a song of six-pence
 When that flock has feasted
 There's workers in the field
 Most surely they will sing
 And four and twenty black birds
 We think it mighty fine of you
 Who care not for the yield.
 To let us have our fling.

TRADE-AT-HOME

Now and then the individual peddler may be facing a personal problem in trying to make a living which will be deserving of the householder's sympathetic patronage. But these cases are extremely rare and the whole system of selling through peddlers is wrong . . . It strikes at the very foundation of sound community building and the development of a better town in which to live, make a living, own property and prosper . . . Home-earned dollars should be spent in home town shops . . . Dollars spent in home town shops stay here to create more jobs, better business and increase wages . . . Stamp out the peddlers by refusing to purchase their wares . . . Make Heppner known as "bad territory" to distant city manufacturers who sit like ravens waiting for seed to fall . . . TRADE-AT-HOME . . . That's the way to help make your job more secure; your property more valuable; and your future more promising . . . TRADE-AT-HOME.
