Fix Color in Vegetables

Homemakers who can green veg-County Clerk C. W. Barlow and etables are often disappointed to

This loss of color in such vege-tables as new peas and green beans, spinach and others is due to the high temperature necessary in canning, Miss Lucy Case extension spe-cialist in foods and nutrition at plants, is sensitive to acid during cooking, she points out, and most vegetables contain some acid which the heat of cooking or canning drives out. In an open saucepan, this acid passes off with the steam, but in a sealed can, it attacks the green color.

Recent investigations have shown that if the green vegetable is precooked at low temperatures, be-tween 160 and 180 dgrees, the color seems to "set" so that when the vegetable is put in the can and exsed to the high heat of processing, it will not fade so badly.

The new way, then, is first to cook green vegetables a short time in a aucepan with water, keeping the emperature at or below simmering gram at the regular meeting of the temperature at or below simmering point, Miss Case says. Then put the hot vegetable immediately into sterilized hot containers and process under steam pressure. Best results with greens are reported from precooking until they wilt, with green beans, until they bend without breaking, and with young tender peas, about 5 minutes.

Juices suitable for jelly making after spending the past two weeks are definitely acid in flavor. If acid seems lacking, a good precaution is to add 1 tablespoon of strain-ed lemon juice to each standard Mrs. M. Rowell near Hermiston measuring cup of fruit juice, say home economics specialists at O. S. C. This facilitates jellying to some extent and adds to flavor. A mim-eographed leaflet, HE 498, entitled.
