off the backs of bareback buckers, supplied liberally throughout the show. Steve Shannon, cowboy clown extraordinary, gave the crowd plenty of laughs with his trick mule and freak car, while the singing of Gene Normoyle, Ione youth, the announcing of out-of-town visitors and invitations to the Grant county fair and Pendleton Round-Up extended by Herman Oliver and Al Powers, respectively—all through the microphone of the announcing car—were appreciated parts of the show.

Queen Mary Robinson's official visitation from Pendleton on Friday was fittingly hailed, when she paid her respects at the throne of Queen Genevieve Hanna. She shared the royal box at Friday's show and rode in Friday morning's parade. Miss Shirley Trowbridge of John Day was an honored attendant of Queen Genevieve, and on Saturday extended a public invitation to Rodeo's queen to attend at the throne of the Grant County fair. The local princesses, Betty Doherty, Frances Rugg and Harriet Heliker completed the comely array of feminine royalty.

The Heppner school band under Harold Buhman, director, added color with their bright purple, gold and white uniforms, and their playing was a greatly appreciated feature.

And that chivalry is not yet dead was shown by the manner in which the cowboys permitted Misses Eva Wilcox and Dimple Crabtree, both former Rodeo queens, to win the musical rope races Friday and Saturday respectively.

Labor Day is observed so that people may rest and meditate on the privileges of having work by which they may earn a living. Later we have Thanksgiving Day, in which we again thank the blessings of life.

The religious people of 3400 years ago also had two days which had a similar significance. First came the Feast of Firstfruits, and later the Feast of Ingathering. Their first consideration on these holidays was to express gratitude to God for providing them with a harvest.

Surely America has not declined to a lower level than the civilization of three thousand years ago. The neglect of God's house would seem to indicate it.

Despite an appeal by Morton Tompkins, chairman of the legislative committee of the state grange, the state department of agriculture isn't going to put the 1935 agricultural marketing act into effect unless 100 farmers petition in accordance with law.

The grange leader said he wanted the act, successor to the unconstitutional AAA, tested by the state supreme court before the next session of the legislature. So few farmers attended a hearing called by Solon T. White, state director of agriculture, that he decided not to invoke the law. The butter industry already has a case in court in Multnomah county that may settle the AMA's fate, White pointed out.
