The Old-Timer Again.

SHORTLY after its appearance, we commented in these columns on a poem, "The Saga of a Cowboy," written by our old neighbor and friend, C. A. Minor, and delivered by him at the 37th annual session of Eastern Oregon Pioneer association at Service creek, Sunday, July 19, 1936.

In transmitting it, Mr. Minor also included a "ling" inspired by a poem in these columns recently anent the coming of the new year. The poem was that of Mrs. Ella Shell read at the Pomona grange new year's meeting at Boardman.

Mrs. Shell said of the old year: "We won't detain him, let him go, He's brought enough of pain and woe."

A little different view is taken by Mr. Minor in his offering. Here it is:

1936 GOOD BYE—1937 WELCOME. The old year has gone; we picked its bones and set it free. And I wonder if this one will be as kind to you and me; It gave us health and happiness, and friends by the score. The love of those friends and companions—could we ask more?

It gave us a home and fire-side, books to enlighten our mind. Where we mixed with those of our liking—what more to find? It gave us a home in Mt. Vernon where only the he-men live. With bear and deer for the hunting—what more could it give?

And when tired of the day's labor, we gathered at home at night. While we list to the radio playing, and all the world was bright. I thought as I heard that music, and the things last year did give. Could this year that's now upon us grant more for which to live?

So good-bye, Old Year, though it grieves our heart to the core To bid you this farewell parting, for we'll never see you more. And now, New Year, that you are coming, and we both start anew, We'll try to aid you where we can, and live a little better, too.

We'll go to church and meetin's, and meet criticism with a laugh. And when the parson comes to see us, we'll kill the fatted calf. We'll build churches for our meetin's, work six days, not seven, And when we get this all 'goin', this country will be a Heaven.

We'll grow no more at fortune, but sail on faith's bright wings. And if we fail to reach our goal, we wish for better things. Now, New Year, that you are with us, one thing more I'd have you do: Tell my Heppner friends to stop and see us, when passing through.

Al Capone's Car.

SINCE Al Capone has been a government guest on Alcatraz island down in San Francisco bay, he has probably learned that he was just a neophyte in constructing fortifications. Still the automobile which he used in defying law and order as Uncle Sam's number one gangster arouses indignation that such a formidable weapon against society could have been constructed and put into use.

A local man who viewed Al's car in Portland last week brings back some description of it, as told in another column.

The jailing of Al was just the beginning of breaking the backs of the gangsters. The job is not yet done, though J. Edgar Hoover and his "G" men daily report progress.

It is pitiful, in a way, that any person could have the supreme egotism to think that he could outwit and defy organized society, as Al apparently did. The sad part of it is that he, and others like him, were permitted to get as far as they did, or are. It wouldn't have been possible except for the passivity and tolerance of a fearful public.

Al and his ilk operate on the theory that anyone can be forced to do anything through threat of life. Their latest racket is manifested in the meanest form of all, stealing small children of the well-to-do class and threatening to take their lives unless a sum of money is paid.

Undoubtedly Al used these tactics in getting his awe-inspiring automobile made, as he also used them to seal the mouths of those in his service. Al accumulated a large fortune this way, but a fortune that will never do him any good. He came to the end which is so surely reached by all who break the fundamental laws of society.

Al's fortified car is now just another exhibit of the enduring fact that "crime does not pay."

Legion Auxiliary Aids Bandon, R. C.

Heppner unit, American Legion auxiliary, met Monday evening at the home of Mrs. Alva Janes. A number of items of business came up for discussion. The child welfare chairman, Mrs. Estes Morton, reported that practically all the articles in the supply shelf had been sent out to local needy families and the auxiliary will be glad to receive any contributions of used clothing. It was also reported that a quilt had been sent to the Bandon unit. It was voted to contribute $2.50 to the local Red Cross chapter for flood relief.

Plans for the auxiliary's annual George Washington birthday pie sale were made. This will be held February 20 at Dix's store.

One thousand poppies were ordered for the Memorial Day poppy sale. Although that day is several months away, the men in the veterans' hospitals have started making the poppies for which they receive 1 cent each. This money is a great help to them and their families during these winter months.

Mrs. Lucy E. Rodgers, president of the Oregon State Teachers association and unit Americanism chairman, spoke to the unit concerning the work and purpose of the teachers' association and asked that the unit approve certain legislative measures concerning education. Delicious refreshments were served by Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Chester Brown who assisted her.

CROP PROSPECTS GOOD.

Dan Barlow, in the city Tuesday morning from Eight Mile, reported prospects good for the coming wheat crop. While snow blew badly from south slopes, the north slopes are still well covered. He reported the Henry Peterson and Emil Carlson ranches still snowbound, though they could get out by riding horseback as far as Carl Peterson's and taking the car on. "When we had horses, we didn't think anything about snow drifts," Mr. Barlow said. "But now that we depend on cars, they're bad." He recalled seeing several deeper snows in his 40 years in the county, but didn't remember any snow drifting so badly.

LIBRARY ELECTS.

Officers of Heppner Public Library association were elected at the recent annual meeting as follows: Allan Bean, president; Mae Doherty, vice-president; Phyllis Pollock, secretary; Louise Becket, librarian; Mrs. Lucy Rodgers, trustee, and Irma G. Blackburn, publicity chairman. The book selection committee will meet Saturday afternoon, February 13 at 4 o'clock at the library. The above officers and Lera Crawford, Madge Thomson, Alberta Parker, Elaine Furlong, Beatrice M. Dixon, Hazel Mahoney and Elizabeth Blankenship compose the committee. All members are urged to be present, and all library patrons interested in selection of new books are cordially invited to attend.

Time is the measurement of the earth's rotation on its axis.
