Relatives or friends in Oregon was the principal reason given by these migrants for coming to this state, 25 per cent of them giving this as the chief factor involved. Climate persuaded 12 per cent, previous visits to Oregon 9 per cent, while 3 per cent said they were attracted by advertising.

The present attitude toward Oregon by nearly all families visited was very favorable and most of them, except recent arrivals, had made substantial progress toward acquiring ownership of farms.

New Oregon 'Pioneers' Tell Why They Moved

Approximately 41 per cent of the immigrant families arriving in Oregon from 1930 to 1936, inclusive, were experienced farm operators, according to the results of a survey just published by the O. S. C. experiment station in cooperation with the WPA and resettlement administration.

The report is the result of a sample survey taken in 112 rural school districts in 16 Oregon counties. The survey, made through the use of relief labor, sought a general background concerning the families who have been settling in Oregon in increasing numbers, says L. R. Breithaupt, state supervisor of rural research and author of the report.

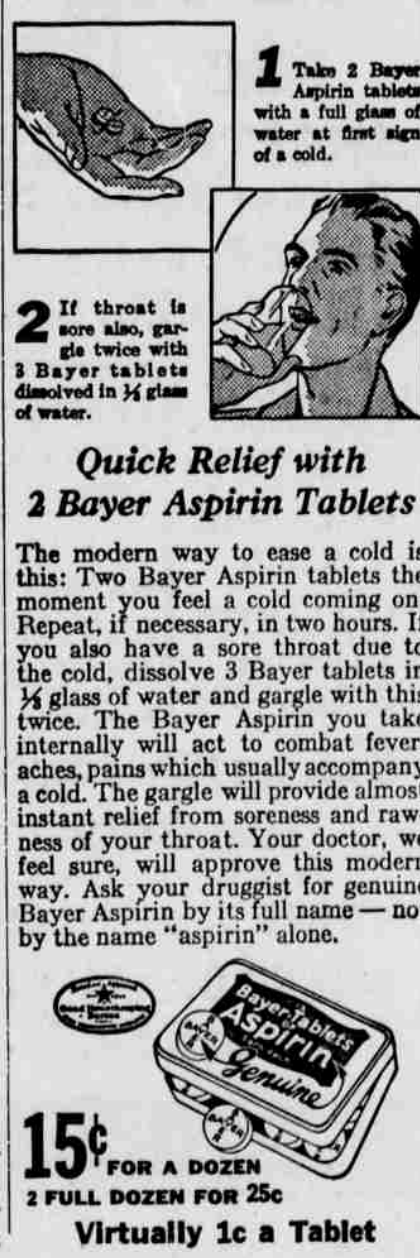

Information previously obtained from all school district clerks showed that 5130 immigrant families arrived in Oregon from January, 1933, to June, 1936. The present report covers a period from January, 1930, to November, 1936, or nearly twice as long as the previous time.

The study showed that a larger percentage of the families coming in 1936 were headed by persons who had actual experience in farm operation than was the case previously.

Contrary to a common belief that practically all of the immigrants came from the middle west, the study showed that 53 per cent came from the western group of states. A total of 44.3 per cent came from the north and south central states, while scattering numbers ranging from less than 1 per cent came from the other more distant regions of the country.

Inadequate income in their former location was named by 51 per cent
