Baseball Practice Started

Tuesday night saw the Heppner high school baseball team again out on the field to start another big season. There are many of the veterans back from last year, among them being La Verne Van Marter at first base, Len Gilman as pitcher, Riley Munkers at short stop, Charles Cox and Joe Aiken in the outfield. Willie Stone, a sophomore who failed to turn out last year, is working hard to take the catching position which was left vacant due to the graduation of Howard Bryant. There are several others who are working hard for positions on the team. Most of the first week will include getting the arms loosened up and batting practice. Harder work will follow next week. In the past two years Heppner has played thirteen games and lost but one. This is a very good record, considering that there had been no baseball team for several years previous to 1935. They hope to have as good a record this year as they have had the past two, and with support from the town people and the student body they will have.

There are also several fellows turning out for the track team, with two track men, Norton King and Len Gilman, back from last year. They and several of the others have already started the strenuous task of getting into shape for the coming track meets.

Did anyone happen to notice—

The romantic mood of Clayton Wright at the show Saturday night? (Cupid sure hit him.)

"Ag" Class Surveying Tennis Courts

The Agricultural classes are surveying and drawing contour maps of the piece of ground south of the gym. It is necessary that the ground be leveled before construction can be started on the tennis courts.

The freshman agricultural class is working on its project books so as to have them in order before their chicks arrive the latter part of the week.

The F. F. A. is preparing for the sectional contest at Condon, which will be held March 26.

Now that spring is here, the class will be taking many field trips. Livestock judging will be the main issue taken up.

As forty per cent of the agriculture boys have to participate in Home Beautification, 654 trees have been sent for.

Girls' League Party

On Friday, March 12, from seven-thirty to ten-thirty, the Girls' league entertained the student body with a dance. The music was provided by Marjorie Parker, Norton King, Gerald Cason and Buddy Blakely. During intermission the high school mixed quartet gave two musical numbers. Refreshments were served. The gymnasium was effectively decorated with green and white streamers, and dimly lighted by lamps in forms of shamrocks. A large group attended, including teachers, students, and several members of the alumnae.

Band Concert Saturday Afternoon

The band will appear on Main street Saturday at 2 o'clock. Several marches will be played. The band has taken every spare minute for practice in hope of winning high recognition at Corvallis. With the cooperation of the band students and the student body their chances for success are excellent.

Brain Buster

A Mathematician in Service

Mr. Watson kept his liquor on revolving shelves in his cellar. On one of the shelves where he kept his favorite champagne there were seventy-two bottles arranged in eight compartments, nine bottles in each. Distrusting the servants in his home, he would descend to the cellar each night before going to bed and count the bottles on each shelf. Not bothering to note the number of bottles in each compartment, he would merely count the totals along each side. He thus counted twenty-seven each way on the champagne shelf.

A crafty servant worked out a way of deceiving his master and making some money on the outside by stealing champagne. He took four bottles and rearranged the remainder so that his employer would still count twenty-seven each way.

How did he rearrange the bottles and for how many nights could he continue to take four bottles each time before his formula ran out?

The answer to last week's Brain Buster is that the night watchman had told the vice-president that he had a dream the night before, and night watchmen are supposed to be awake at night.

Personality

Harold W. Buhman, principal of the Heppner grade school, was brought up in Canby, Oregon. He went to grade school and high school at Canby. Graduating from the Canby high school he finished at Oregon State normal. He has attended summer school both at the University of Oregon and the University of Washington. He taught at Drain, Oregon, before coming to Heppner where he has held the position of grade school principal for six years.

PINTO-POINTS

From all reports, the Heppner grade school basketball quintet showed the teams at Arlington a few tricks about basketball. They won their three games with comparative ease, the closest being the 18-16 win over Rufus; but in this game most of the opponent's scoring was piled up against the local's subs. The trophy awarded them was the first they have had the honor of winning, and naturally their pride stands out. They are a young group of basketballers whose ventures in high school basketball should be of great success.

An interesting feature of the all-star selection was the fact that a Heppner boy made the team, although he made only one basket during the three games in which he and his teammates participated. This proves that high-point men are not always the only outstanding hoopsters. Feed him the ball, and any player will run up a score, but a two-point in three-games man must show signs of being a basketballer, and evidently the all-star selectors thought that of Harry O'Donnell.

Above grade school basketball comes high school, and there'll be plenty of it at Salem the latter part of this week. It's a tough proposition, that of picking the state champ, with Astoria, Eugene, Mac-Hi, Mc-

Minnville, La Grande and Franklin of Portland all gunning for the title. Astoria, whose trip to Salem this year makes it their 15th in 17 years and their eleventh straight, looks to be the best bet, but if Mac-Hi gets over La Grande in her first game, the Pioneers will make it tough for any teams standing in the way of the state title. Don't forget McMinnville!

Next comes the college casabers. The northern division championship is at stake next Saturday when Oregon takes on Washington State at Pullman, and with those two quints fighting for such a title, the game promises to be a rough one. It's a promise that the referee will excuse someone from the game, and the first team to lose a player via the foul route will end up in the second notch of the northern division.

The reason for Washington unsuccessfully defending her title this year, at least one of them, is one that even this writer can solve; so its depth doesn't go very far. The University of Washington has a team of individualists; a team that placed three men on the northern division all-star; a team that would end up in third place. Coach Edmundson will no doubt put forth his best efforts to obtain a five-man team for the next season.

If scholastic difficulties and the moving problem had not confronted them, Lexington high would have had a more successful basketball season, so stated the Lexington athletic manager through conversation with him. Bill Burchell and Keith Gentry both moved to other sections of the state, and La Verne Wright left school. With Wright and Gentry as forwards; Palmer, center; and Peck and Burchell holding down the guard positions, this "wished-for" Lexington team could give any of the surrounding teams a good run for their money.

With next week's edition comes the last installment of basketball, so bear with me till next week, at which time the ending episode will be given. It's a promise!

Do You Know That—

Tests on 14,844 Minneapolis school students revealed that the flat-chested ones were more intelligent than the full-chested? The flat chested were also usually heavier, taller, and less prone to tuberculosis.

Wood ticks—the kind you find on your dog—can live for three or four years without food?

Citizens of Boston pay more for brown eggs than white, but New Yorkers willingly pay more for white? (It's just a matter of local prejudice.)

Social leaders of America receive more than a million dollars a year for advertising testimonials? The Vanderbilt name brings the highest price.

Bears and moose are increasing in numbers instead of decreasing as is commonly supposed? Officials take the bear census by studying tracks at the edge of salmon streams and learning to know each bear's footprints.

Scientists have revived animals suffering from electric shock by giving them a counter-shock?

Southern engineers are now using cotton in road building?

A University of Kentucky basketball player scored thirty-four points in thirty-four minutes against Creighton last year?
