Rates on individual farms vary according to productivity, just as do the rates for the several counties. Each farm is assigned a productivity index from which a farmer may calculate by multiplying it times the county base exactly how much he can earn per acre for cooperating in the conservation program. Malheur county again has the highest average rate, at an even $10 for diversion, $6.70 for soil building allowance on diverted acreage, and $1.34 on crop land on non-diversion farms. Merrill Team Nebs Out Opponents in Crow Killing Race

Hen Hatching Story Blasted; Stolen Crow Mystery Solved.

The score: Merrill team 2265 points; Richardson team 2225 points. And that's a real crow race as the Morrow County Hunter and Anglers club rounds into the last 12-day stretch in a race between the two teams to see which can make the greatest inroads into the crow and magpie population of the county. While the Merrill gang came from behind this week to take a neb's lead, anything may happen from here on.

In fact it is already happening. This week Richardson interviewed his worker accused by Merrill of setting crow eggs under his hens, and found the accusation to be far from the truth. Said party is using an incubator for the hatching, Richardson avers.

Then comes to light the solution of the mystery of Richardson's miss-County average diversion payment ing crow, advertised in these colwas recovered from a room of a member of the Richardson team, but indisputable evidence was uncovered that the captain of the opposing team was the guilty culprit. Everyone Asked To Join Caravan To View New Ditch

Willow-Ditch Creek Flow at Height, Lions Told; Visit Planned.

All those who would like to see Ditch creek dumping its waters into Willow creek via the 6800-foot canal recently completed by CCC moys and the soil conservation service, are invited to join a motor caravan planned to leave at the Heppner hotel at 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Joseph Belanger announced plans for the event at the Monday Lions luncheon, and it is expected the service club will be largely represented in the party.

Millard D. Rodman, soil conservation supervisor, added his invitation for the community to see the ditch now while the flow is at its peak. Sixteen second-feet of water was flowing through the ditch Monday morning, he said.

The trip by car can now be made to the coal mines. The motor caravan will unload there and hike on to the head of the ditch obout a mile farther up. Considerable snow is still present, and while well packed, it would be advisable for everyone making the trip to wear rubbers at least, and boots would be preferable, Rodman said.

Belanger emphasized the importance of this work in providing additional irrigating water for Willow creek farmers, and said that anyone making the trip will be well repaid by the sight afforded at this time.

The service club also went on record as backing the city clean-up day, next Tuesday, and urged upon everyone to support the mayor and councilmen in their attempt to make the city ship-shape.

One native Englishman was not so much concerned about the coronation of the new king yesterday as he was in another important English event. That event was the celebration of Florence Nightingale day.

Jack Milsom, the Englishman in question, as a boy lived neighbors to Miss Nightingale in Berkshire. He recalled having held on to her hand many times for walks thru the garden. He believed he was probably the only person in Heppner to have known Miss Nightingale personally.

In later years, Miss Nightingale wore a heavy veil which was never lifted in the presence of men, except those with whom she was closely acquainted. One of these was Mr. Milsom's father, a fellow in the Royal Society of Horticulturists.
