Oregon Traffic Deaths

A series of weekly articles on the problem of Highway Safety by Earl Snell, Secretary of State.

Approximately a quarter of a million Oregon motor vehicle operators have applied to my office during the past thirty days for a renewal of their drivers' licenses. It is expected that another hundred thousand applications will be received during the present month, and that all of these licenses will be in the hands of the applicants before the first of August.

Proper handling of this work constitutes a considerable problem, as well as being an important factor in safety work. The actual writing and mailing of the license cards is a comparatively small matter, but to see that they are placed only in the hands of people who are able to meet the requirements considered necessary for safe driving involves a large amount of checking and personal investigation. This constitutes a responsibility that I am conscientiously trying to meet, and at the same time give as prompt service as possible.

Defective vision, lack of knowledge of the motor vehicle laws, inability to properly handle a car and many other reasons compel the license division to reject hundreds of applicants, in the interests of safety. Proper licensing of drivers is a heavy responsibility, but only thru a strict compliance with the law is it possible for the department to do its part in helping to eliminate Oregon's traffic deaths.
