Building Plan Book Issued by State College

Assistance with many of the ordinary farm building needs is now available to a greater extent than ever before through the O. S. C. extension service, as shown by the recent issuance of a progress report on a farm building plan service. This has been issued in the form of a 23-page mimeographed handbook, one copy of which has been distributed to each county agent, where it may be examined by anyone interested in farm construction.

It is not intended for general distribution, as it is more in the form of a descriptive catalog of plans and specifications now available through the extension service. Descriptions of many building and equipment plans are given to aid Oregon farmers in planning and constructing better and more serviceable buildings.

The farm plan service is not an architectural service, and farmers planning on making any major alterations had better obtain competent help, it is pointed out by Everett H. Davis, extension agricultural engineer. The handbook has been prepared by Davis and H. R. Sinnard, experiment station architect.

In each case where the college has designed a farm building for use on the central station or the various branch experiment stations, plans and specifications have been retained and copied. These and numerous other plans, ranging in extent from residence plans issued by the U. S. department of agriculture to the various minor equipment items are included in the booklet. Blueprints for each may be had at cost price, ranging from 10c to $4.35 each.

A few of the items listed are farm house, barns, roof designs, hog, sheep and poultry buildings, machine shed, shops, garages, manure pits, hay sheds, grain elevators and granaries, storage houses, milk houses, smoke houses, fruit and nut driers, and various minor miscellaneous buildings.
