SHRUBS TESTED AT HERMISTON

Hermiston—More than 200 species of ornamental plants and shrubs are being tested on the Umatilla branch experiment station in actual use as plantings around the buildings. They are being watched primarily for hardiness, as many of the ordinary plantings common to Oregon will not survive the occasional severe winter temperatures of this region. The plants have been growing now for several years and are of an age when their general characteristics may be seen by visitors to the station.

THISTLE CONTROL REPORTED

Albany—Keeping Canada thistles constantly below the ground surface through cultivation is the principal factor in controlling this pest by the summer fallow method, says County Agent F. C. Mullen, after surveying the results obtained by Linn county farmers last summer. Farmers who obtained satisfactory control cultivated their land an average of 16 times, while those who got poor results cultivated an average of eight times. Starting cultivation early in the season also seemed to give better results than where it was delayed until late June or early July.

CLUTCH SLIPPAGE

Motorists who carry trailers should see that the clutch in the car is kept properly adjusted at all times, according to Z. H. Lane, manager of the Emergency Road service of the Oregon State Motor association. Unless the clutch is correctly adjusted the extra strain caused by the trailer load will cause slippage, increased generation of heat and rapid wear of clutch facings.

PEDESTRIANS LOSERS

Pedestrians are the victims in two of every five fatal traffic accidents, points out the Oregon State Motor association.

WORLD HIGHWAYS

Representing an increase of 51 per cent in the past eight years, highways in the world now total 9,900,000 miles, reports the Oregon State Motor association.

LET'S GET AHEAD OF OUR WEEDS

This patch of Russian knapp weed may have served a purpose in providing shelter for some bathing beauties, but its luxuriant growth is a serious menace to profitable agriculture in the county, says Joe Belanger, county agent. So far as he has been able to determine, this is the only instance where the weed has been of any benefit whatever. Once it gets a start like this it is extremely difficult to do anything about it. Such patches are now comparatively few, but if left unchecked they will eventually cover the creek bottom land.
