1938 AAA Plan Sets Up New Goals

Definite objectives in the form of goals designed to increase soil conserving crops and practices and to insure an ample and balanced supply of food, feed and fiber crops, are the distinguishing features of the new 1938 Agricultural Conservation program, according to details just received by F. L. Ballard, vice-director of extension at Oregon State college.

The revised plan was announced first in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, Monday, September 20, following conferences in which three representatives from Oregon took part. These are N. E. Dodd, Haines, chairman of the state AAA committee; N. C. Donaldson, Corvallis, secretary, and P. M. Brandt, head of the animal industries division at OSC, representing the extension service.

"While changes have been made in the program for the coming year, they represent progressive development of the provisions of 1936 and 1937 and are in line with the basic objectives of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment act," says Mr. Ballard. "These objectives are stability of farm income, soil conservation and maintenance of normal supplies.

"Oregon farmers will have opportunity to become familiar with such changes as have been made at a series of county and community meetings being planned for the near future. A state committee meeting called immediately upon the return of the Oregon representatives will make final plans for the series."

National, state, county and individual farm goals will be established for soil depleting crops and for soil conserving crops and practices under the revised plan. Payments for individual farms will be made for keeping within soil depleting goals and for attaining soil conserving goals. If the former goal is exceeded or the latter is not reached, payments will be decreased proportionately.

County goals will be based on average acreages in the past, adjusted when necessary to trends in production and on the recommendations of district and county agricultural planning committees. In each county the agricultural conservation committee will establish for each farm soil depleting and soil conserving crop goals. Specific crops and practices applying to these goals will correspond in general to those approved for the 1937 program, with such changes as may be found desirable in particular states or districts.

Smut Harm Deduced To Lowest Point in '37

The best record in smut control to be made in modern times by Oregon and Washington farmers is shown in recent reports of the percentage of cars of wheat grading "smutty" received at Columbia river and Puget Sound terminal inspection points during August of this year.

A report issued by the Pacific headquarters office in Portland shows that the percentage of smutty cars in August this year dropped to 7.9 percent as compared with an August average of 23.9 percent for the past seven years and a high point of 40.5 percent in 1931.

Bert W. Whitlock, in charge of the Pacific headquarters of federal grain supervision, attributed the decline in smutty wheat the last few years to the work done by agricultural colleges and other agencies in encouraging better seed treatment and seed selection. Another factor this year has been a fairly high percentage of spring grain which is normally more easily protected than fall grain.

With the large volume of clean seed now available, together with better seed treatment and the availability of a number of smut resistant varieties such as Rex, Oro, Rio, Albit, Hymer and Ridit, farmers should be able to eliminate smut losses still further next year, believes G. R. Hyslop, head of the plant industries division at Oregon State college.

A new circular of information entitled "Dusting Seed Wheat to Control Seed Borne Smut in Oregon," has recently been issued by the OSC experiment station, which includes most of the latest information on seed treatments and other suggested practices in smut control. The new improved Ceresan, a mercury dust compound, is given first in the list of recommended treatments. The others are basic copper sulfate and copper carbonate. The basic copper sulfate is a recent addition to commercial seed treating chemicals, which does not injure the stand as common ground bluestone sometimes does.

Discovered even more recently than the issuance of this circular is the fact that using the bare hands to stir seed wheat that has been treated with new improved Ceresan will cause severe burning and irritation if the hands are wet, even with perspiration. Use of gloves or other protection is recommended.

School districts in the territory served by the Portland General Electric company will buy their lighting service at a flat rate of two cents per kilowatt hour under a new schedule approved this week by N. G. Wallace, public utilities commissioner. It is estimated the new rate, which becomes effective October 1, will save school districts in PGE territory approximately $18,000 a year.
