GRAZING DISTRICT MAKES PROGRESS

Bartholomew Elected Director;
 Regional Grazier Commends
 Showing; To Burns October 20

Thirty livestock operators were present at the annual meeting of the Morrow Grazing association held in the courthouse Monday, and elected Charles Bartholomew as a director for the five-year term, and adviser for the three-year term. Other directors whose terms are unexpired are L. D. Neill, John Krebs, Jack Hynd and Wm. P. Kilkenny.

Marvin Klemme, regional grazier at Burns, was present and explained that applications for 1938 licenses would be mailed in the near future so that such applications could be passed upon by the board sometime the latter part of November. Such application blanks may also be obtained at the county agent's office. Charles Bartholomew, president of the board of directors for 1937 grazing season, was chairman at the meeting. L. D. Neill, treasurer, read the financial report for the first year's operation, which showed the association to be in splendid financial condition. Joe Belanger, county agent and association secretary, outlined the program of work hoped to be carried on by the Soil Conservation service in cooperation with the grazing district. Several livestock men indicated a desire for water development and with the cooperation of these individuals assured, a full program of work for a spike camp of the CCC camp at Heppner, to be located somewhere in the district, will be prepared.

On Tuesday morning, the board of directors held a meeting at the county agent's office with Marvin Klemme and G. L. Hankins, forest range examiner. Mr. Hankins spent two or three months last summer making a detailed survey of the commensurate property of licensees. The directors discussed at considerable length several problems which have arisen, and conferred with a representative of the Northern Pacific railroad as to the best basis for cooperation between the railroad and the grazing association. The directors plan to attend the meeting at Burns on October 20, when advisers for all seven of the grazing districts in Oregon will assemble to discuss rules to be used as a basis for issuance of permits. At the Burns meeting, also, it is planned to hold conferences with officials of the Soil Conservation service regarding the program of work to be followed within the grazing district and with the Northern Pacific railroad officials concerning cooperative agreements relating to methods of handling railroad property lying within Oregon Grazing District No. 7.

Mr. Klemme was enthusiastic about the progress made during one year's cooperation by the Morrow Grazing association. He felt that 1938 might confidently be expected to be the last year for temporary licenses and that it would probably be feasible to issue permits for the 1939 and later grazing periods.

COLORFUL HISTORY RELATED

 was on hand. This first drive was on Christmas day, and pens were filled to overflowing so that the rabbits kept on going right over the top. He believed the drive accounted for 12,000 of the pests. Another drive on New Years day accounted for 15,000 more.

Apparently so plentiful was the rabbit supply that Mr. Bartholomew and three of his neighbors started a cannery for the purpose of canning them. The cannery was at Echo. Several tons of rabbit meat were canned, but before any could be sold the cans began to bulge. They waited until the Umatilla was at flood stage and dumped the whole lot in the river. The spring following farmers working in their hay fields complained of the stench resulting from breaking the cans open with their machinery. The rabbit canning venture cost him $3000, Mr. Bartholomew laconically recalled.

While the North Morrow district, known officially as District No. 7, with 300,000 acres may seem large, Marvin Klemme, regional grazier from Burns in the city for the district election meeting Monday afternoon, told Lions that the largest district under his supervision consists of 5,400,000 acres. Other guests included G. L. Hankins, forest range examiner; Mr. Goad, son of Umatilla county's sheriff; Herb Sauter, with SCS at Gibbon, and Victor Wigglesworth.
