The Pioneers Meet

LEXINGTON will be the mecca for all Morrow county pioneers who can possibly get there, Saturday, when the annual pioneers' reunion will be staged.

Originated several years ago, largely at the instigation of Mrs. Sarah Booher, one of the oldest pioneers of the county and a resident of Lexington, this occasion has come to hold a place of deep affection in the hearts of pioneers as well as of the hearts of everyone. It has given a largess of good fellowship without ostentation or show, affording occasion for renewing old acquaintanceships and friendships largely through one of the oldest and best mediums known to man—that of feeding the inner man.

It is not justice to say that the Lexington occasion has its main attraction in the always bounteously-set dinner table, o'er which is offered in pot-luck fashion the best in culinary achievement of many of the county's best cooks, though there is no denying that this feature in years past has been much talked about. However, well satiated appetites make for contentment and leave pleasing recollections, and in doing this part exceedingly well the Lexington reunion has established a reputation.

There is always a pleasing program of entertainment in the afternoon, and traipsing of old-fashioned fandangos and new-fangled dances in the evening to round out a day exceptionally well suited to promote social intercourse.

All too many of those early day empire builders of this county have reaped their last reward. Their ranks are becoming thinned each year. Those remaining are entitled to the evidence of esteem held by those who have shared the benefits of their accomplishments. All who can should join in the day set aside for the pioneers at Lexington Saturday.

H. S. Basketball to Play in Two Divisions

Election of officers and plans for basketball playing schedule were effected at meetings of the Central Oregon School Masters club held at Heppner Sept. 27 and at Arlington October 6. Officers named were Alden Blankenship, Heppner, president; George A. Corwin, Boardman, vice-president; Julian R. Rothenberger, Boardman, secretary-treasurer, and Vince Barratt, Arlington, bull twister.

Two divisions were arranged for the basketball playing schedule, with Heppner, Fossil, Condon and Arlington playing in the Upper Columbia Basketball league, western division, and Echo, Stanfield, Umatilla, Lexington, Irrigon, Ione and Boardman playing in the same league, eastern division. Play-off games between winners of the two divisions will be held the week of Feb. 13-19, 1938. Glenn Linn, superintendent of Umatilla high school, was named executive for the eastern league division.
